THIS BOOK IS AFFECTIONATELY INSCRIBED

Preface

IN its external loveliness, and even more in its deeper spiritual beauty and truth, lies sufficient reason for most patient and devoted study of The Pearl; yet the poem has hitherto found little fame or real appreciation. This is easily accounted for by the remoteness of its dialect, the obscurity of its language and literary relations, and its somewhat unworldly, and at present uncongenial, content. Two editions only have appeared — the first being little more than a diplomatic reproduction of the manuscript, and the second incomplete in apparatus; both are expensive, and not in common circulation.

My object has therefore been twofold — to bring the poem to a greater number of readers, and to furnish it with such setting and explanation as may help to release its pure and noble influences as a work of art. To this end distinctions of meaning in the glossary are more elaborate than is usually necessary in the study of a Middle English text; and many citations are made in the notes as partial evidence that the poem is not an isolated creation, but is closely allied, both through its general characteristics and many details, with the literature of various kinds under whose inspiration it was written.

The text I have derived from the manuscript through photographs of it made for me at the British Museum. I have thus been able to correct errors of detail in both previous editions, and to pass judgment upon Fick's notes on the text and the manuscript. Certain difficulties, however, still remain, which I hope may engage skill greater than mine, and thus in due time be cleared away. For the sake of accessibility I have deposited photographic facsimiles of the manuscript in the library at Princeton and at Yale.

I have taken the liberty to change the title commonly given to the longer homiletic poem of our author. Clannesse is awkward, and sorts ill with the modernized titles given to the other works of the poet. Cleanness in its modern sense does not render the poet's word clannesse, and is too narrow and prosaic. Since the titles are, in any case, only those given by modern editors, I have adopted the title Purity, as being in all respects more accurate and appropriate.

It remains to express my gratitude to Professor Albert S. Cook, not only for reading much of the proof, but for his friendly interest and counsel during the progress of the work. I am indebted also to Professor Flügel for his helpful criticism and suggestions ; and to the Rev. H. M. Bannister for most useful advice in certain difficulties of transcribing the text.

MANUSCRIPT

THE unique manuscript of The Pearl is at the British Museum. It is bound up with other pieces in a small quarto volume of vellum folios, measuring six and three-fourths inches by four and five-eighths, and the whole constitutes Cotton MS. Nero A. x (newly added number, + 4). The most complete description of the manuscript is that by Sir Frederick Madden in his Sir Gawayne, pp. xlvii-l. The relevant part of this manuscript is folios 41-130 (new numbering), which contain the following texts in order: The Pearl (43a-59b), Purity (61a-85b), Patience (87a-94b), Gawain (95a-128b). This portion of the volume, according to Madden, was written by one and the same hand, in a small, sharp, irregular character, which is often, from the paleness of the ink and the contractions used, difficult to read. Twelve rude pictures in color are interspersed, illustrating the text, of which the first four belong to The Pearl. The manuscript was probably written near the end of the fourteenth century,<sup>1</sup> perhaps by a scribe of a region somewhat further south than that of the poet, as is indicated by some admixture of Southern forms not employed in rime.<sup>2</sup> Knigge thinks that at least The Pearl had been copied once — perhaps several times — before the date of the manuscript.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Certain minor peculiarities of the manuscript which do not appear in the transcription in this book may be mentioned for the consideration of more critical readers. (1) The following words, which I have either hyphenated or printed as one word for uniformity's sake, are in all cases written in two or more parts in the manuscript : *agrete, aldermen, almyzty, alone, anvnder, arepede, atslykez, bredful, bycalle, bycawse, bydene, byhod, byswykez, bytazte, bitalt, bytwene, bytwyste, castel-walle, day-glem, debonerte, degres, doel-doungoun, doel-dystresse, evermore, forbrent, foridden, fordolked, forzete, forgarte, forgo, forpayned, forsope, forþy, Godhede, godnesse, zorefader, hereinne, hevenryche, holte-wodez, hyl-coppe, hymself (except 680), innoghe, innome, lompelyzt, luf-daungere, luf-longeyng, mankyn, maysterful, myself, mysetente, nobynk (except 587?), oncom, onsware, outdryf, outfleme, outryzte, outsprente, queresoeuer, quepersoeuer, ryztwysly, slepyng-slatze, sumtyme, sunnebemez, sytole-stryng, to-euen, torente, perfore, berinne, peron, peroute, purzoutly, byself (except 779), umbegon, umbepyzte, unavysed, uncortayse, vnderstonde, unhyde, untrewe, utriwyt, vrygynflour, wythinne, wytnay, wytouten, wod-scharwez, wylday. The following words are divided in the manuscript only in the cases indicated : alas, 1138; also, 1071; anende, 186, 697, 975; bostwys, 814; byfore, 294; bygonne, 33, 549; byzonde, 146, 981; flor-de-lys, 195; inlyche, 546; into, 231, 521, 525, 628; iwyse, 279; neuerpeles, 881, 901, 912, 913; ryztwys, 675, 689; towarde, 67, 974; perof, 161, 410, 1069, 1084; perto, 833, 1140; welnez, 528. The only case of actual hyphenation by the scribe is saker-fyse, 1064. (2) On the other hand, many unstressed monosyllables are written as proclitics, especially the pronouns I, no; the article a; the prepositions in, on, to: the auxiliaries am, con; and frequently me, hem, he, al, the article be, of, fro, for (in for to), al, as, how, more, ne, tyl, be, mon, schal, wyl. (3) watz seems preferable to wac<sub>3</sub>, as G. prints it (cf. esp. 1041 n.). j is represented in the MS. usually by long i (short i in about one-sixth of the cases), as is also the pronoun I; v initially,*

DATE

Scholars have assigned The Pearl to dates varying from 1360 to 1400, as follows: Ten Brink, 'in the sixties or seventies';<sup>1</sup> Thomas, before 1375;<sup>2</sup> Gollancz, about 1360;<sup>3</sup> Fick, on the basis of phonological investigation, near the end of the century.<sup>4</sup> It seems probable that Purity was written before The Pearl.<sup>5</sup> Dr. Carleton F. Brown has shown that in the composition of Purity the French text of Mandeville's Travels was used, and that this text was probably not accessible in England before 1370.<sup>6</sup> Furthermore, if The Pearl is related to Chaucer's Book of the Duchess, the date, since Blanche, the subject of Chaucer's elegy, died in 1369, cannot be earlier, and probably not much later, than 1370.

DIALECT

For details of the phonology and inflection (of verbs), the reader may be referred to the studies

Introduction

by Knigge, Fick, and Schwahn.<sup>1</sup> Their investigations encounter certain difficulties in the matter of dialect, most of which in the case of The Pearl are to be explained by the strict requirements of metre,<sup>2</sup> and by the poet's familiarity with the speech and literature of other regions than his own. His literary language, then, is not purely that of any spoken dialect.<sup>3</sup>

In general, the language is that of the extreme Northwest Midland,<sup>4</sup> and is distinguished from the language more characteristic of the Midland by a large admixture of Northern words, inflections, and sounds. It is, for the most part, the dialectal vocabulary which makes the text difficult for the reader of standard English, and part of this difficulty is due to the great number of Scandinavian words employed.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, the Romance element in the vocabulary is unusually large, as the glossary shows. This is an artificial and sophisticated modification of the dialect, due chiefly to the poet's reading in French literature.

The most distinct dialectal feature is the consistent use of the Northern ending -es of the 2 and 3 sg. pres., and -ande of the pres. part., instead of the usual Midland -est, -eb, -ende or -inge.<sup>6</sup> Another characteristic

<sup>3</sup> A fact perhaps too often overlooked by students of phonology. To say (Knigge, p. 43) that The Pearl was written in a region a little farther north than Garwain may be laying too great stress of interpretation upon the linguistic phenomena of the poems.

<sup>6</sup> Syking, 1175 (cf. n.), is the one exception; it may be due to a is u for y (umlaut of o or u) : burde, 316; lure3, 339; gulte, 942; mul, 905; vmbe, 204, 210, 1052 (Knigge 29–30); but cf. cortel, 203; huyle, 41; mol, 382; worck, 511; hyl, hil, 789, 976; kynde, 74; lyttel, 152, etc.; lyper, 569; wyrke3, 536. The occasional use of a Northern a (= O. E. ā) for o is, in nearly every instance, a concession to rime.<sup>1</sup> A case within the line is nawhere, 534, 932. Another trait is g for ȝ : gayn, 138; gyue, 174, 270, etc.; gete, 95; but forȝete, 86.

ORIGINS

Romance Poetry. One of the most important antecedents of The Pearl is the Roman de la Rose. The Roman was begun as early as 1237, and finished about 1277. The Pearl was not written before 1370. In the meantime the influence of the great French allegory

Southern scribe, or to the intrusion of the Southern form into the North on its way to becoming standard. Throughout the plural the ending is generally the Midland -e(n), though a few cases of Northern -es appear ; see 75, 79, 308, 439, 510, 573, 687, 1080, 1197. The -n of the infinitive is sometimes retained for the rime ; see 45, 68, 69, 820, 914, 1196 ; but at 16 and 1032 it serves no metrical purpose.

of love had become paramount. Every English and French court-poet of the fourteenth century doubtless knew the Roman at first hand, as did the author of The Pearl himself, who, in his poem, Purity, cites Jean de Meun at length.<sup>1</sup> During the fourteenth century both the style and the machinery of the Roman de la Rose were employed again and again, in many cases to set forth subjects wholly different from that of the Roman itself. The Pearl is an instance of such adaptation, but the influence of the older poem is apparent rather in the employment of the style and machinery of the Roman, than in the reproduction of single details.

While much of this influence proceeded directly from the Roman, doubtless much of it was reflected, or, one may say, sustained, by the many fourteenth-century imitators of the Roman with whose works our poet was familiar, and with whom he must have felt a certain comradeship in his art. Such are Baudouin de Condé and his son Jean, Watriquet de Couvin, Guillaume de Machault, Froissart, Deschamps, Langland, and Chaucer. It is therefore likely that certain devices and expressions in The Pearl, instead of being derived immediately from the Roman, were adopted by the poet as commonplaces in contemporary poetry.<sup>2</sup>

The device of the sleep and the vision in field or

<sup>2</sup> See citations in the notes from the poets mentioned. Cf. also pp. xxii, xxx, xxxiii. The fact that Chaucer's four visions were likewise 'composed under the dominating influence of the genre of vision-literature,' and not drawn from one definite source therein, was demonstrated before the Modern Language Association at Haverford, Dec. 28, 1905, by Mr. W. O. Sypherd.

wood was put to a great variety of uses in the fourteenth century. Besides the traditional use as the setting for a love-poem or for the praise of women, it was also employed in allegory of a moral or homiletic cast ; in parables, dits, and contes ; in satire, both political and ecclesiastical ; in eulogy ; in poems treating a combination of these themes ; and finally, as in The Pearl and Chaucer's Book of the Duchess, in elegy.<sup>1</sup>

In The Pearl appears also the setting familiar to any reader of the Roman de la Rose or its descendants. There is first the garden where the poet falls asleep, and then the garden or fair country which he visits in his dream. Though this setting does not invariably accompany the device of the dream, it recurs frequently enough, with even the same details, to have become a convention, and in The Pearl the garden where the poet falls asleep reproduces some of its familiar traits (cf. p. lv). In the principal scene of the poem are the familiar trees, birds, flowers, fruits, meadow and river, and precious stones ; but towering cliffs of crystal are superadded, and all is much more spacious, resplendent, and sublime than in the poet's predecessors and contemporaries.<sup>2</sup>

The Roman de la Rose, itself first of all an allegory, was a model for most of the allegory of the fourteenth century. In this respect The Pearl differs from the Roman, since it is not primarily allegorical. Indeed, in the last analysis, the conscious allegory of The Pearl is a minor element in the poem, and, except for a Biblical parable or two, consists in little more than the use of the term 'pearl' for a person, as the term 'rose' had been similarly employed.<sup>1</sup> Not one of the personifications of abstract qualities, whose speeches constitute by far the chief part of the Roman and its kind, is distinctly present in The Pearl. The significance of this fact is shown elsewhere.<sup>2</sup>

One curious practice of fourteenth-century poets has been adopted in The Pearl—that of dating the poem. The poet says :

To þat spot þat I in speche expoun
 I entred in þat erber grene,
 In Augoste in a hyȝ seysoun,
 Quen corn is coruen wyth crokeȝ kene.<sup>3</sup>

'Hyȝ seysoun' is a high feast;<sup>4</sup> and the highest feast in August, and the one most likely thus to be designated, is that of the Assumption of the Virgin, on the fifteenth.<sup>5</sup> The appropriateness of the date of

<sup>5</sup> Watriquet de Couvin frequently dates his visions : Li Dis des IIII Sages (Dits, ed. Scheler, pp. 163 ff.), is dated the Ascension, 1319; Li Dis de l'Arbre Royal, an elegy (Dits, pp. 83 ff.), a Thursday morning; Li Tournois des Dames (Dits, pp. 231 ff.), mid-October, 1327, evidently the date of an actual dream; Li Dis de l'Iraigne et du Crapot (Dits, p. 64), Tuesday in June, 1329. So Froissart, Le Joli Buisson de Jonece (Oeuvres, ed.

this feast to the theme of the poem is obvious,<sup>1</sup> yet, judging by the analogies just cited in the footnote from works of other poets, it may be merely the date of the poet's conception of his work, or the day of an actual dream which comforted him in his grief, and which he elaborated into the poem.<sup>2</sup>

In external form, as well as in matter, The Pearl owes something to Romance origins — a topic discussed more conveniently in the section on metre.<sup>3</sup>

The Bible. Another of the important literary influences apparent in The Pearl proceeds from the Bible. Of the total of 6074 lines in the author's four poems, about 2400 are quotation or paraphrase of Scripture. Of these, about 2100 are, however, in Purity and Patience, and the rest in The Pearl. Subjoined is a list of Biblical allusions in the poem, which is itself almost a sufficient comment upon the poet's Scheler, 2. 1 ff.), l. 859, a dream dated Nov. 30, 1360; cf. 3. 5, ll. 134 ff.; Chaucer, House of Fame, 'The tenth day of Decembre,' l. 63; cf. Chaucer, Parl. Foules 117, and Skeat's note; Canticum de Creatione (Horstmann, 1878, p. 124), l. 1186. Dated poems other than visions are found in Dits de Watriquet, p. 329, feast of St. Mary Magdalene in the year 1320; p. 359, St. Lawrence, 1324; p. 290, day after feast of St. Martin, 1327; Froissart, Œuvres 1. 222, the year 1368; Œuvres de B. te J. de Condé, ed. Scheler, 3. 49, December. The practice is also found in Provençal; see Mahn, Werke der Troubadours 1. 198. In time the date of the poem came merely to designate a season appropriate to the matter in hand. See Triggs' Lydgate's Assembly of Gods, E. E. T. S., Extr. Ser., 69. liii–lv, where later examples are cited.

<sup>2</sup> This last may be indicated by ll. 19–20, where sange seems to designate The Pearl itself, at least the part from l. 61 on.

use of Scripture for poetic purposes.<sup>1</sup> Both in The Pearl and in his other works this use is two-fold : (1) as final authority for a statement, in the so-called proof-text method of theological discussion, as at ll. 458–468, 595–596, 677, 697, etc.; (2) for pictorial effect. In the first of these uses the quotations are fragmentary and generally exact. But the second use is by far the more extensive. It includes particularly the description of the New Jerusalem ;<sup>2</sup> and in the Parable of the Vineyard, though the passage is cited in argument, there is a manifest tendency to insert picturesque details. A glance at the table of Biblical equivalents will show that in his use of the Apocalypse the poet has by no means taken all the material which it affords, nor reproduced it in its original order, but has chosen here and there a detail, so that the effect of the picture of the Heavenly City in his poem is quite different from that of the Scriptural account.<sup>3</sup> More noticeable still is his consistent rejection of nearly every suggestion of symbolism or allegory found in the original.<sup>4</sup> In this he differs not a little from the practice of his times, and the difference cannot be better illustrated than by comparing his description of the New Jerusalem with

<sup>2</sup> In the homiletic works each account — the Parable of the Wedding Feast, the Flood, the Destruction of Sodom, Belshazzar's Feast, the Story of Jonah — is expanded with much inserted picturesque material quite irrelevant to the appended moral. Thus in Purity 440 lines are used to narrate the events recorded in 31 verses of the fifth chapter of Daniel, and in Patience 48 verses of Jonah are expanded to 463 lines.

that by Richard Rolle (The Pricke of Conscience 8788 ff.), where every detail is an explained symbol of some attribute, sentiment, or experience.<sup>1</sup>

Unlike his contemporaries, our poet employs little apocryphal material, and seldom draws from patristic embellishment or commentary, or cites patristic and scholastic authority.<sup>2</sup>

Alliterative Poetry of the North. Besides the more external influences which have just been mentioned, there is the influence of the poetry peculiar to the region in which the poem was at home — the fourteenth-century poetry of the North. Its chief medium was the revived alliterative long line employed by our poet in his other works, whose influence is shown in the abundance of alliteration, irregularity of verse, and much of the peculiar poetic vocabulary of The Pearl. Four other and more essential traits of the Northern school appear with greater or less distinctness in our poem:

First is the energy of its diction, which relapses, in <sup>1</sup> Cf. also Bruno of Asti (Migne, Patr. Lat. 165. 891); Rupert of Deutz (Patr. Lat. 169. 1192 ff.); Hugo of St. Victor (Patr. Lat. 176. 1159 ff.); Bonaventura, Diacta Salutis 10. 6; or such commentaries on Revelation as that of Albertus.

<sup>2</sup> In his article in Publications of the Modern Language Association 19. 115 ff., Dr. Brown says: 'Our author handles Scriptural material with an accuracy of detail which is not to be met with in any of the other metrical versions.' He cites the M. E. Genesis and Exodus and Cursor Mundi in comparison, but these are by earlier and less skilful writers. No unusual accuracy of quotation appears in The Pearl as compared with an example like Speculum Gy de Warwycke, E. E. T. S. Extr. Ser. 75, ll. 947–1004; earlier, but quite as accurate, are the Jesus MS. Passion (E. E. T. S. 49. 37) and the De Mulcre Samaritana (ib., p. 84).

Introduction

the case of The Pearl, though somewhat more rarely than usual, into homely phrase, as at 492, 850, 1085, 1158.<sup>1</sup>

Second is a feeling for the large, sublime, and austere aspects of nature, such as high cliffs,<sup>2</sup> and the darkened tors of Cumberland reverberating with thunder (875).<sup>3</sup>

Third is the moral earnestness of the poem.<sup>4</sup>

Lastly, a somewhat unexpected concomitant of these traits is the love of glittering splendor displayed in bewildering profusion, such as the gold, silver, crystal, color, and gems of the Earthly Paradise, the lavish use of pearls everywhere, and the emphasis of like details in the picture of the New Jerusalem.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Cf. the description of the sacred vessels, Pur. 1441–1488; of the green knight, Gaw. 151–178; of Gawain, ib. 566–618;

Chaucer. At ll. 429–431 the poet says of the Virgin Mary :

Now for synglerty o hyr dousour,
We calle hyr Fenyx of Arraby,
þat freles fleze of hyr fasor
Lyk to þe Quen of cortaysye.

Strikingly similar, both in thought and cadence, are ? the lines of Chaucer concerning Blanche, Book of the Duchess 981–984 :

Trewely she was, to myn yē,
The soleyn fenix of Arabye,
For ther liveth never but oon ;
Ne swich as she ne knew I noon.<sup>1</sup>

Other resemblances lie in the lament with which each poem opens, the poet's grief relieved by a visitation of sleep, the machinery of the dream, the birds, the meadow, the grove, the lady among her fair companions. Our poet represents himself playing with his pearl, which slips through his fingers and is lost in the grass, or is stolen by 'wyrde' (249, 273); Chaucer's 'man in blak' speaks more conventionally of playing chess with fortune, who checkmated him by taking away his 'fers,' or queen, whom now he mourns. The bird-passage in the dream (304–320) may be com-

And gode faire Whyte she hete,
That was my lady name right.

Similarly, it may be that our poet has hidden under the term 'Pearl' the name of her he mourns. As Mr. Gollancz guesses, it may have been Margaret, or more likely Margery.<sup>2</sup> Indeed, this interpretation of the name Margaret or Margery was common enough, especially in connection with St. Margaret.<sup>3</sup>

Whatever the resemblance or difference in detail, the fact remains that both poets, writing under the influence of the same school, have used virtually the same external device to the same poetic end — an elegy, and that too in a manner distinct from that of other elegiac poetry of the time. The Pearl is, of course, at once more concise and more abundant than the Book of the Duchess. It is the product of more skilful composition and more mature art, and indeed is nobler in every way. Yet it is quite possible that the author of The Pearl, having recently become acquainted with Chaucer's poem, was charmed with its sweetness, and that its influence combined with that of two other poems in some respects similar to it, in the production of The Pearl.

Boccaccio. One of these poems is the fourteenth eclogue of Boccaccio, in 290 lines, written probably in 1360.<sup>1</sup> Its resemblance to The Pearl was first noticed by Dr. E. K. Rand,<sup>2</sup> and was demonstrated by Professor Schofield in the Publications of the Modern Language Association 19. 203–215.

The style of the poem is the pastoral style of Virgil, and things Christian are consistently set forth in the language of paganism. Silvius (Boccaccio), an old shepherd, is lying in his hut or cave near the hour of dawn, when his dog indicates the approach of a stranger. An unearthly light plays through the woods, driving back a servant who has been sent out to explore, and seizing like flame upon the hut, yet without consuming it. Silvius rushes forth in terror, and discovers unfamiliar flowers all about, while strange odors and music fill the air. He suspects a divine presence. Olympia appeals to him, calls him father, and tries to quiet his fears and console him. At first incredulous, he soon recognizes her, tells how he lost her on the way to Naples, and has sought her throughout the world. He asks her present condition.

*Mirum, quam grandis facta diebus
In paucis; matura viro michi, nata, videris!*

He wonders at her beauty, and she explains that the Virgin gave it her. She then points to his two dear sons, who are with her. In his delight he calls for pastoral games, and Olympia sings a song of twenty lines in honor of Christ, reviewing his descent to earth, his life, passion, resurrection, and promise of judgment. The refrain, ‘Vivimus eternum meritis et numine Codri’ (Christ), opens the song, and recurs every fifth line. Delighted, Silvius promises her and the boys a reward, but she says her present condition admits nothing mortal. He promises to come and live with her in pastoral ease and content, but she explains that Heaven is now her fatherland, and that he must die first. She bids him farewell, but he detains her with an outburst of grief, and she consoles him with a description of the heavenly country — its trees, flowers, rivers, birds, animals, its sun, moon, and stars, brighter than those of earth, its fair weather and peace. There, high on a grassy mound, sits the shepherd Archesilas (God the Father), and with him the Lamb, on whom the blessed feed, while redeemed souls, gathered in fourfold chorus about him, sing his praises for ever. Olympia then describes how she was received into Heaven by the Virgin, who also is enthroned in unspeakable glory, how she became a bride, and how she and her companions, ranging through flowery fields, sing ever in honor of Mary and her Son. And finally, Olympia shows her father the manner of life by which these joys are to be attained, and leaves him to his grief just as the dawn breaks.

As in the case of the Roman de la Rose, our poet's indebtedness to Boccaccio is found in his general method of treating an elegiac theme, and perhaps in his actual choice of theme, rather than in his appropriation of poetic details from the eclogue. General points of resemblance may be easily discovered in the summary just given, and the few possible cases of exact verbal correspondence will appear from citations in the notes. The absence of the mother in both poems has prompted like conjecture in both cases — that she was either unfaithful or dead.<sup>1</sup> Chronological facts seem to show that Violante's maturity in the vision is not that which she would have attained at the time of the vision had she lived, but merely a concession for the sake of verisimilitude in the dialogue.<sup>2</sup> The case may have been similar in The Pearl. Or very likely the reason in both cases may have been theological.<sup>3</sup>

Dante. It seems almost certain that our poet had, in his wide acquaintance with literature, come to know the greatest poetic achievement of his period — the Divine Comedy. Indeed The Pearl much more nearly resembles certain parts of this poem than it does the Vita Nuova, which has been more than once cited as a closer analogy.<sup>1</sup> Both The Pearl and the Divine Comedy are visions of a loved one departed, appearing first in the Earthly, and then in the Heavenly Paradise. In both descriptions of the Earthly Paradise there are the forest, the trembling leaves, the fruits, the wandering poet, the river, the vision of a lady just beyond the stream.<sup>2</sup> In both poems the poet, from the hither side of the stream, talks with the departed maiden on the farther side. In both the poet is rebuked for spiritual weakness and dulness. In Beatrice and in the Pearl there is the same apparent lack of tenderness, — the same pietade acerba — so surprising to a modern, in their spiritual ministrations. In both cases the lady intercedes with God that the poet may be allowed to behold Paradise, descends from her proper place to meet the poet in the Earthly Paradise, and conducts him through the experience of his vision. Both women, after leaving the poets, are seen by them in their beatified state, though in one case the poet was not, doubtless through a sense of his own unworthiness, allowed to enter Heaven. Both poems begin at the point in the poets' lives of lowest spiritual ebb and weakest faith. In both poems personifications of abstract or inanimate things, so common in mediæval allegory, are conspicuously absent. In the construction of both poems there is a like artificial symmetry and regularity. To Dante's one hundred cantos, the perfect number, correspond the one hundred stanzas of The Pearl.<sup>1</sup> In the linking of stanzas there is continuity similar to that of the terze rime. It seems hardly likely that, near the end of the fourteenth century, a man of liberal education, schooled in the poetic art of contemporary French poetry, familiar with at least one poem of Boccaccio, should not have met with the Divine Comedy.<sup>2</sup> Of the author's indebtedness to other literature, such as the French Mandeville,<sup>3</sup> the Fathers,<sup>4</sup> and Langland's Piers

(Lat. 41. 776); and in Cap. 15: ‘Restat ergo, ut suam recipiat quisque mensuram, quam vel habuit in juventute, . . . vel fuerat habiturus, si est ante defunctus. . . . In ejus ætate et robore [resurgent] usque ad quam Christum hic pervenisse cognovimus.’ In Cap. 19 he is of their mind ‘qui utrumque sexum resurrectum esse non dubitant.’

<sup>2</sup> Of no little significance in this matter is Boccaccio's connection with Dante as commentator, lecturer, biographer, and imitator. See A. Dobelli, Giornale Dantesco 5 (new series 2), pp. 241-243 for many details in the eclogue supposed to be derived from the Divine Comedy. In this case our poet's knowledge of the less almost certainly implies his knowledge of the greater poet.

Plowman,<sup>1</sup> slight trace appears in The Pearl. Conspicuously absent is any sign of interest in classical lore, with which our poet, in his reading, could not escape some acquaintance.<sup>2</sup>

LITERARY MOTIVES AND GENRE

The variety of elements and motives brought together in The Pearl is equally characteristic of Chaucer and other poets of his time, and a natural accompaniment of the complete fruition of mediævalism. Analysis of many a contemporary poem shows it to be a hybrid of various species of poetical composition, each of which in earlier times had independent origin, and was for a long time kept distinct from the rest. Often mingled with these are fragments from the classics. Thus, in The Pearl, though classical tradition is ignored, there are blended allegory, the vision-motive, the ideals and style of chivalry, theology, homily, and debate, and all these elements are combined to subserve the main elegiac subject, and wrought into an essentially lyric form.

Elegy. The poem is first of all, I believe, an elegy, and has until recently been accepted as such. But in an elaborate and ingenious argument Professor <sup>1</sup> See Thomas, pp. 26–32, for evidence that the poet may have been influenced by Langland in composing Purity.

Schofield has maintained that it is not autobiographical, but allegorical, with a theological digression, cast in elegiac form ; that it mourns no loss, but is merely intended to illustrate the beauty of purity under the symbolism of a pearl, and in the guise of a personification.<sup>1</sup> There is room here for only a brief presentation of arguments.

I. If we accept the view that the poet was an ecclesiastic, ‘being a priest, he would not,’ says Professor Schofield, ‘go deliberately out of his way to call people’s attention to his child of shame, and then without apology proceed to exalt above all else purity of life.’ The reasons for thinking that the poet was not an ecclesiastic, certainly not a priest, are given elsewhere.<sup>2</sup> But in any case the possibility is ignored by Professor Schofield that, having spent a part of his life as a married layman, he may, in later grief and solitude, have entered the religious life. Furthermore, the impassioned manner in which he treats theological questions is more characteristic of deep emotional experience than of interest in theological questions for their own sake.<sup>3</sup>

II. If the poem were an elegy, and the Pearl represented one whom the poet knew on earth, ‘he would have been able to paint of her an unforgettable portrait’; he ‘could not have failed to recall her in actuality, to have indicated some feature of her personal experience, to have noted some incident connected with her birth or death, to have given some hint of the circumstances of their association.' As to the portrait, it should be observed that none more distinct than that of the Pearl is found in the analogous works of Dante, Chaucer, or Boccaccio, already cited. But the most striking example in this connection of conventional mediæval portraiture — and one in the very school of The Pearl — is Watriquet's Dis de la Feste du Conte de Flandre (Dits, ed. Scheler, pp. 329 ff.), wherein the poet describes a number of contemporary ladies, but in conventional terms which individualize even less than those in The Pearl. Watriquet evidently expected no unfavorable comparison of his alleged portraits with the originals. The difficulty of exact portraiture in The Pearl is increased by the fact that the maiden died at the age of two, and appeared to the poet in maturity, further changed, like Beatrice, by the glory of her blessed condition. As to the mention of incidents and circumstances of association, these too are wanting in Chaucer and Dante, and are insignificant in Boccaccio. It is also alleged that the Pearl's attitude shows no filial tenderness, that 'the poem reveals no parental or filial emotion, betrays no personal love.' Neither does Beatrice at first return aught but rebuke for Dante's forgetfulness and dulness in spiritual things, and, while his pride, impatience, and presumption remain, her bearing is austere. As he acquires patience her tenderness appears, but in The Pearl such occasion for tenderness does not come until the poet has, by his impatient presumption, been separated from the maiden.

As implied in stanza 100, had it not been for this failing of his, her tenderness might have become more manifest; it has already been forecast in lines 397–407, in her intercession with God, and in her readiness to be the poet's guide. As to deep tenderness on the poet's part, what doubt can remain as one reads lines 282–288, or 325–336?<sup>1</sup> Add to these the personal remark of the poet at line 233 that the maiden ‘watȝ me nerre þen aunte or nece?’ This and other personal allusions in the poem<sup>2</sup> admit of no allegorical interpretation, and could only obscure and obstruct the poet's intention, had he been writing allegory.

III. The remaining argument consists in a discussion of the mediæval symbolism of the pearl, the mediæval conception of maidenly purity, and mediæval allegorical machinery, so far as these several matters point to the allegorical nature of The Pearl.

It will be found, however, that neither in the lapidaries nor elsewhere is the pearl traditionally the symbol of ‘clean maidenhood.’ So great is the variety of interpretations that the poet could not expect his readers to select from them the allegorical meaning imposed upon The Pearl by Professor Schofield, without some explicit indication which he has not given. There are, on the one hand, the many significations given in the note on line 735. On the other hand is a group of significations ignored by Professor Schofield, though indeed they might be made to lend as much support to his theory as any which he has cited. They are found in the prologue to the life of St. Margaret in the Legenda Aurea (ed. Graesse, 1846, cap. 93 (88). pp. 400 ff.), as follows : ‘ Margareta dicitur a quadam pretiosa gemma, quae margarita vocatur ; quae gemma est candida, parva, et virtuosa.<sup>1</sup> Sic beata Margareta fuit candida per virginitatem, parva per humilitatem, virtuosa per miraculorum operationem. Virtus autem hujus lapidis dicitur esse contra effusionem, contra cordis passionem et ad spiritus confortationem.’ Three of the eight English lives of St. Margaret paraphrase this prologue, namely, those by Lydgate, a pseudo-Barbour, and Bokenam.<sup>2</sup> They are, of course, all later than The Pearl, though they indicate, if indication were needed, common English familiarity with the Legenda Aurea.<sup>3</sup> The passage cited is proof sufficient that virginity is only one of many interpretations of the pearl, and that it could never have been assumed by the poet to be the obvious, traditional one.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Bonaventura, in his Diæta Salutis 4. 4 (De Castitate), analyzes various symbols of chastity at length, but never once alludes to the pearl.

Familiarity with this passage, however, may be faintly reflected in the word ‘smal’ (6, 190), and perhaps in 369; but the allusion probably came from another cause than the intention of writing allegory. It is explicable on the consideration that the child’s name was Margaret or Margery,<sup>1</sup> and that the poet’s mind, dwelling upon her name, reverted naturally to the saint whose name she bore. This explains, first, the emphasis of her virginity and espousal to Christ, both of which are prominent in the liturgy and the hymnology employed in honor of the saint.<sup>2</sup> But it explains further, in all probability, how the poet came to make use of the pearl as a disguise and an embellishment. With the saint’s name once in mind, the frequent association of her name with the margarite or pearl would present itself to him immediately; and to one not only whose imagination so reveled in radiant loveliness, but who was obviously familiar with similar practices among contemporary poets, the use which he actually has made of the pearl was all but inevitable.<sup>3</sup> It is maintained that the maiden in The Pearl is simply a personification of virginity presenting herself to the poet as does Philosophy to Boethius, Holy Church to Langland, Nature to Alain de Lille, or such a personification as Franchise, Beauty, and Riches in the Roman de la Rose.<sup>1</sup> But in each of these cases not only are we told expressly what abstraction the personification represents, but the symbolism of each detail is made unmistakable. It is otherwise in The Pearl. If the poem is allegorical, then, contrary to the rule of mediæval allegory, the interpretation is nowhere given, or even suggested, by the poet. On the other hand, it is obscured by many details whose symbolism is imperceptible, or whose allegorical interpretation is impossible. We are told that we may not believe that the Pearl is the poet's daughter, because he does not say so.<sup>2</sup> How, then, may we accept as allegory what is obviously an elegy, if the poet never even hints it to be allegory? As to analogies, the elegiac poems of Chaucer, Dante, and Boccaccio are as convincing as the more remote allegorical ones cited. What a poet does not reveal in elegy should surprise nobody. Elegy is generally reticent, and especially so in the utterance of grief and struggle of so private a nature as that intimated in The Pearl.

<sup>3</sup> The same transfer of association occurs in connection with the name of Queen Margaret in Lindsay’s Testament of the Papyngo 547; and in Dunbar, Gladeth thou Queyne, Poems, ed. Small, Scott. Text Soc. 2. 274, ll. 33–40, The Thistle and the Rose, ib. 2. 188, l. 180. Other saints’ names, such as Clara, Agnes, Columba, Cæcilia, were not infrequently etymologized.

Considering the poet's works as a whole it is clear that he is not only no allegorist, but that he rather tends to avoid symbolism, even when it lies in his way. This appears not only in his adaptation of the Apocalypse, but in every other extended paraphrase of the Bible in his works.<sup>1</sup> If he makes any use of symbolism, it is, as a rule, explained with the utmost care. Instances are the explanation of the pillar of salt into which Lot's wife was transformed, Pur. 994–999; the explanation of the pentangle, Gaw. 620–670; and Pearl 733–741. It is significant that Pur. 553–556 and 1067–1068, instead of being symbolical, are kept on the lower level of mere simile. On the other hand, an instance like that of Pearl 733–741 is vague and imperfect.<sup>2</sup>

Allegory. But though The Pearl is not primarily an allegory, it contains certain allegorical elements which may now be defined.

First and most obvious is the figure of the pearl lost in the grass, which, however, rapidly fades into a more literal manner of speaking, and, except for occasional epithets, has quite disappeared within the first three hundred lines.

Secondly, once having associated the maiden with the gem through their common name, it is natural that even a poet who had no preference for allegory should come to feel some correspondence between the qualities of both which would impart, now and then, a certain allegorical cast to his work. Thus the pearl, which is used so lavishly in the poem as an embellishment, gathers a kind of latent symbolism from the qualities of her for whom it stands and with whom it is associated, and for the time being becomes a shining emblem of her virtues. But any such emblematic result was perhaps reached unconsciously, or at any rate did not constitute an important part of the poet's original design. Perhaps it is one indication of the influence of the Golden Legend,<sup>1</sup> or perhaps it is prompted by the poet's familiarity with one sort of French dit, wherein an author selects an object, whether animate or inanimate, and, by analogy with its various qualities or uses as perceived by himself, sets forth his own ideas upon some subject, often of moral or religious nature. Such, for example, is the Conte dou Mantel of Baudouin de Condé, in which the knight's mantle of ermine is interpreted as a symbol of his proper virtues. The mantle is the work of no mean hand, and the knight is the son of a noble father. It is a mantle of strength and durability ; as it is spotless, so is the knight, and as it surpasses all other garments, so the knight's life surpasses all others.<sup>2</sup>

Lastly, The Pearl may be considered allegorical, somewhat as Dante's pilgrimage or Sartor Resartus is, in certain aspects, allegorical. Under the concrete and at least partly imaginary form of the dream lies a serious, almost prosaic, experience, familiar to all men of high spiritual aspiration. In early or middle life they often seem to themselves to have achieved real wisdom, and to have laid hold upon the truth. But a sudden shift of fortune, or stroke of grief, destroys both faith and creed. Then comes the bitter and violent reaction, succeeded by indifferentism ; but by slow degrees the ugly visitation becomes transformed and idealized, until it is the means of entering a new life of true wisdom and peace. This is the experience figured in The Pearl. There is further something almost allegorical in the highly idealized character and condition of the Pearl, as in that of Beatrice, revealing in concrete form the glory of those who have exchanged all for the pearl of great price.

Vision. In addition to its elegiac and allegorical character, The Pearl treats also the popular mediæval theme of the vision of the other world. Many a homily closes with the traditional vivid contrast of the pains of Hell with the joys of Heaven.<sup>1</sup> In the vision of the Earthly Paradise, 61–972, are employed few tradi-

<sup>1</sup> The theme appears frequently in all mediæval Christian literature. The earliest versions on English soil are recorded in Bede's Ecclesiastical History. See E. J. Becker, A Contribution to the Comparative Study of the Mediæval Visions of Heaven and Hell, with Special Reference to the Middle English Versions, Baltimore, 1899; Triggs' Lydgate's Assembly of Gods, E. tional details peculiar to that garden :<sup>1</sup> there is no distinct allusion to the four rivers, and the garden is not located upon a mountain.<sup>2</sup> The description of the Heavenly Paradise appears to be unique. The poet follows a river to a hill near its source for his vision of Heaven. Being drawn from the Bible alone, this description is not only not symbolic, but it omits such accessories as those of fair weather and vernal landscape, which usually occur in this connection.<sup>3</sup>

Homily. Mingled with these imaginative elements are two of more prosaic nature — the homiletic and the theological. The passage 257–360<sup>4</sup> is essentially a sermon in dialogue on the folly of questioning or resisting the ways of God — the theme of Patience ; and there is an implied recommendation of the virtue of moral purity in many passages.<sup>5</sup> Furthermore, fragments of homiletic nature are interpolated at times, such as that on the dying of the seed, 31, 32 ; on fortune, 129–132 ; on the pearl of price, 721–744 ; and the theological discussion, 421–720, assumes at times the tone of persuasion.

Theology. It is clear at a glance that certain theological teachings of the poem are at variance with the prescribed teaching of the Church. This divergence has been skilfully defined in an analysis of the poet's theology by Dr. Carleton F. Brown in the article already mentioned,<sup>1</sup> whose conclusions may be briefly summarized. Two theological questions were uppermost in the fourteenth century : (1) predestination and free-will ; (2) whether men are saved by grace of God, or by their own merits. Tendencies were strong in the direction of the Pelagian heresy of absolute free-will and salvation by merit, and these were combated on English soil by Thomas Bradwardine in his De Causa Dei contra Pelagium. Now, on both these points our poet is not only conservative and orthodox, but enthusiastically so, as is implied in the one case by his repeated reiteration of the necessity of submitting to God, in the other by lines 421–720 of The Pearl. But in the one particular of urging that the joy and reward of all the redeemed are equal he is heretical, since the Church teaches that they are not equal, but graded. This heresy was the heresy of Jovinian.<sup>2</sup> In our poet it indicates an ‘evangelical’ tendency which accompanied the fourteenth century reaction against scholasticism, and looked toward Wyclif. But he was in no sense a schismatic. Here, then, we have one detail of heresy in a man who, in all other known respects, was enthusiastically and loyally orthodox. In this fact lies, I believe, a further indication of the elegiac character of the poem. The belief in the equality of heavenly rewards is certainly at variance with the poet's social ideas.<sup>1</sup> It seems, furthermore, to have been of acquisition more recent than the composition of Purity, for the orthodox view is there clearly implied.<sup>2</sup> The poet's nature as revealed in his works shows not only no readiness for theological or ecclesiastical controversy, but something approaching abhorrence of it.<sup>3</sup> Now an isolated bit of heresy, at variance with the tendency of his convictions concerning society, marking a more or less sudden change in his creed, being but a fragment, and not part of any system of heresy adopted by him, confessed by one whose interest in systematic theology for its own sake is small — such heresy seems naturally not to have been achieved by reason, but is the reflex of violent emotional experience. Furthermore, the manner in which it is set forth is highly impassioned and personal, and not in the tone of the reasoning, systematic theologian. And the opinion is exactly that to be expected of one afflicted as was the poet. For, as he implies, reason and the condition of humanity at large convince anybody that the rewards of heaven must be unequal ; but let a man suffer the loss of the one least dispensable to him — can he then bear to think that the fullest rewards of heaven are not in store for that one, or that at reunion their joys shall be unequal, and their sympathy imperfect ? Under stress of emotion he is forced into the other view, and our poet, conscious of his slight decline from orthodoxy, seems to be trying to justify himself in it by connecting it closely with the orthodox teaching concerning grace.

Debate. An argumentative discussion, however impassioned, may seem to a student of modern poetry quite foreign to the legitimate intention of a poet. But to a mediæval reader the theological element in The Pearl, instead of being intrusive, would be recognized as a familiar poetic form, namely, the debate or dispute. In English the poetic use of debate was less common than in Provençal and French, whence it was derived,<sup>1</sup> and it was limited chiefly to didactic purposes. Some of the more familiar examples are the Debate between the Body and the Soul,<sup>2</sup> The Owl and the Nightingale, The Dispute between Mary and the Cross.<sup>3</sup>

Chivalry. Secular elements in The Pearl, such as are derived from its alliance with Romance poetry, have already been discussed.<sup>4</sup> Yet beneath the definite external marks of this influence, the larger and subtler influence of chivalry pervades the work. It appears first in the poet's insistence upon the social distinctions of chivalry (393, 394; 489–492; 762–765; 774–780; cf. Purity 35–48; 109–124); and upon knightly virtues, such as largess and franchise (605–612); humility and gentle manners, (264, 281, 421, 632, 717), and courtesy (passim, esp. 432–480) — all of which, and more, attain to higher expression in his portrayal of Gawain. His lament (11–24; 47–60; 241–252; 325–336), and his descriptions of the lady's beauty (162–240; 747–756; 907–909), both employ the style of the poets of chivalry. Furthermore, the language and ecstasy of chivalric love are transferred to unworldly objects, as in the representation of Christ receiving his bride (413–420), and in the adoration of the Virgin (425–444).<sup>1</sup> Indeed a certain ecstatic quality prevails in the poem, which, though characteristic of the age of chivalry, is broader and deeper than the formal boundaries of that institution. This is clearly perceptible in the descriptions of Paradise (85–108, 125–156) and of the lady, in the emotional climax of the poem (1081–1092, 1145–1158), and in the contemplation of the person of Christ (805–816, 1129–1144).

METRE.

Finally, the material thus analyzed has been moulded in a strict and difficult lyric form. The metrical structure of the poem combines traits which are both native and foreign, English and Romance. The line in general is iambic, containing four stresses in the manner of the French octosyllabic, sometimes with masculine, but generally with feminine ending.<sup>1</sup> The cæsura is likewise masculine or feminine, and of the latter both

Northup mentions but one line in which the unstressed syllable is lacking — 990; there are in fact eighteen: 17, 51, 72, 122, 134, 188, 225, 286, 381, 486, 564, 586, 678, 709, 825, 990, 999, 1036; in fourteen of these the missing syllable is the first in the last foot; in the others (225, 709, 825, 990) it is displaced by the cæsura. In all these but 134, 709, which he accepts, G. supplies the missing syllable, usually by adding -e. At first sight this restoration is justified by Chaucer's practice, who never omits the unstressed syllable in this metre (Ten Brink, Chaucer's Sprache und Verskunst, 2te Aufl., § 299), and that of his contemporaries (Schipper, Engl. Metrik 1. 278–279). But the verse of the North is freer, and the irregularity here considered is perfectly natural in a poet whose usual medium is the alliterative long line; furthermore, the omission occurring regularly in fourteen the lyric<sup>1</sup> and the epic<sup>2</sup> form occur. Certain apparent irregularities and defects in the line show the persistence of the native practice against the French rule. Such is the constant tendency to two or more consecutive unstressed syllables between stresses, instead of one. This trait of English poetry is more to be expected in a poet who preferred alliterative verse. In his use of it he gains much freedom and movement in a form which might otherwise become too strict. The opening unstressed syllable of a line is often omitted.<sup>3</sup> On the other hand, this opening syllable may be expanded into an anacrusis of two syllables.<sup>4</sup> Another native trait is alliteration.<sup>5</sup>

The strophe of twelve lines riming ababababbcbc I have not found outside of English poetry, though, in its general character, it is doubtless of Romance origin. It occurs frequently in shorter poems of the fourteenth century, chiefly religious.<sup>6</sup> In many of the stanzas the cases at the opening of the fourth foot, and in the four other cases after the cæsura, indicates that it was intentional. I have therefore retained the MS. readings.

closing quatrain, though linked to the octave by the rime b, bears somewhat the same logical relation to it that the sestet of the sonnet does to the octave. In about seventy-eight stanzas there is a distinct pause at this point equivalent to a period or a semicolon, and the quatrain is sometimes adversative (9, 177, 273, 369, 453, 537, 585, 909, 1161).<sup>1</sup> Each stanza is linked to the next by the recurrence of its last word in the first line following (concatenatio.)<sup>2</sup> Furthermore, the stanzas fall into twenty groups, each group consisting of five stanzas with a common refrain. Though this refrain is varied slightly between stanza and stanza within the group, the last word of it is 658–692 in Anglia 7. 282–315. Two of these poems have a satirical character — 117. 683, 740 — both being on the theme, ‘Who says the Sooth he shall be shent.’ The rest are moral or religious, and of the latter the most are devotional. None is in the dialect of The Pearl, and, in nearly every case, they belong to a region farther south.

<sup>1</sup> However, there is some variation in the internal division of stanzas, the commonest form being three quatrains (4+4+4), in 37 stanzas; the next in frequency is 6+6, as in stanzas 2, 18, 19, 20, 25, 26, 30, 31, 34, 39–42, 46, 67, 70, 73, 78, 79, 94, 95, 98, 100; others are 4+6+2, as in stanzas 12, 13, 14, 22, 24, 52, 58, 77, 82, 88, 101; 8+4, as in stanzas 1, 21, 38, 47, 50, 64, 85, 86, 90; 4+8, as in 8–10, 17, 57, 66, 71, 72, 83, 92; and the following seem irregular: 7, 27, 28, 63, 65, 68, 69, 84, 87, 93, 99.

always the same, which, of course, makes the c rime throughout a group the same. The refrain and concatenatio thus produce an effect of both pause and continuity between stanzas, which is one of the most charming external traits of the poem.<sup>1</sup> Somewhat the same effect is produced between group and group by the concatenatio which unites them, and by the change of refrain which distinguishes them. Finally, every group is by itself a complete lyric of five stanzas, each of which in turn possesses characteristics of the individual lyric.<sup>2</sup> In a form so strict a certain license in rime is inevitable. It consists in imperfect rimes, dialectal variations to satisfy rime, and variable spellings, probably with a slight change in pronunciation, for the same purpose.<sup>3</sup> Assonance occurs <sup>1</sup> In group xv there are six stanzas. Ten Brink has suggested that one of these may be superfluous (Hist. 1. 349, n. 2). I suspect the second (no. 72), whose inferiority is readily apparent. Unlike any other stanza of the poem, it contains nothing essential to the progress of the poem, and nothing which is not implied in the stanza immediately preceding, except, perhaps, the allusion to the death of the body, which is unnecessary. Furthermore, the metre of the last six lines stagnates, or moves on a dead level, which is uncharacteristic of the other stanzas. The stanza is, therefore, probably interpolated, or more likely was rejected in the original manuscript by the poet, but got copied into the line of succession of which the surviving manuscript comes.

<sup>2</sup> Some more than others. Such are the opening stanzas, and the last stanza is virtually a lyric pendant to the poem, which may be conceived as having ended at l. 1200.

at 791. The identical rime, however (53, 1112), was considered an embellishment, rather than a defect, in Romance poetry.<sup>1</sup> The device of making the last line of the poem nearly identical with the first is found also in Patience and Gawain.<sup>2</sup>

AUTHOR.

The question of authorship has been as prolific in conjecture and discussion as such questions usually are. The Pearl, however, like most of the Northern poetry of its time, is still anonymous. Two claims may here be briefly considered: (1) 'Huchown of the Awle Ryale'; and (2) Ralph Strode. Huchown was first suggested by Guest<sup>3</sup>; his view was accepted by Madden in 1839,<sup>4</sup> but rejected by Morris in 1864 upon dialectal grounds.<sup>5</sup> Trautmann, after examining carefully both content and vocabulary, is convinced that Huchown is not the author.<sup>6</sup> The argument for sake of rime; another instance is gawle, 463, whose usual form in this dialect is galle, 189, 915 (Knigge, p. 21). Mas, 1115, riming with tras, glassee, becomes messe at 497, to rime with dresse, gesse, etc. (cf. O. F. messe); hyre, 523, 534, etc., becomes here, 616; wore, 142, 154, and ware, 151, 1027, are alterations in rime of the usual form were; so are wace, 65, wasse, 1108, 1112, and whatz, 1041, for the regular wat3; cortes, 754, for cortayse, 303 (cf. 433), etc.

Huchown consists in little more than Wyntown's contemporary allusion to him in his Chronicle (273–354), where he calls him, 'Huchown of þe Awle Ryale' (the royal palace), and says (304–305):

He made þe gret Gest of Arthure
And þe Awntyre of Gawane.

If this Awntyre is our Gawain, then Huchown wrote The Pearl. The Gawain manuscript is headed in a late hand Hugo de. But external evidence of this kind proves nothing, and the internal evidence is on the other side.

The Strode theory<sup>1</sup> is based entirely upon an entry in an old Merton College Catalogue, where, among other fellows, is 'Radulphus Strode; nobilis poeta fuit et versificavit librum elegiacum vocatum Phantasma Radulphi'.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Horstmann seems first to have guessed that this Phantasma was The Pearl, and to have own, Anglia i. 109–149. Yet in 1902 appeared Mr. George Neilson's Huchown of the Awle Ryale, claiming in industrious but high-handed argument the following works for Sir Hew of Eglington, with whom he identifies Huchown: Wynnere and Wastoure, Gawain and the Green Knight, Pearl, Purity, Patience, Golagros and Gawain, Erkenwald, Awntyrs of Arthure, The Wars of Alexander, The Destruction of Troy, Titus and Vespasian, Morte Arthure, Pistil of Swete Susan, Parlement of the Thre Ages. These include more than 30,000 lines, of which nearly 27,000 are assigned to a period of three years! On Huchown, see F. J. Amours, Scottish Alliterative Poems, Part II. li-lxxxii, Scott. Text Soc. 38. The discussion, so far as it relates to The Pearl, is well summarized by Dr. C. F. Brown, in his article, p. 116, n. 4.

communicated his conjecture to Mr. Gollancz, who elaborated it without acknowledgment.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Gollancz identifies Strode, the poet, with Chaucer's 'philosophical Strode.'<sup>2</sup> Mr. J. T. T. Brown<sup>3</sup> has shown that the two Strodes are not identical, and Dr. Carleton Brown adds that the poet, being a member of Merton, the leader of the strongly Southern party at Oxford, would not have written in the dialect of The Pearl. That the author of the The Pearl wrote Purity, Patience, and Gawain there can be no doubt,<sup>4</sup> but opinions differ not a little concerning the order of composition.<sup>5</sup> Instead of the order, Pearl, Gawain, Purity and Patience;<sup>6</sup> or Gawain, Pearl, Purity and Patience;<sup>7</sup> Purity and Patience, Pearl, Gawain seems the more probable, at least considering the art and technique of the poems.<sup>8</sup> The first two mentioned are much more diffuse, and contain more that is irrelevant than do the others. The episodes are more loosely articulated, both logically and in composition, and the moral element is clearly distinct from the sensuous.<sup>1</sup> The reverse of each of these characteristics is illustrated in Gawain; for no moral teaching — certainly no description of the essential and universal beauty and goodness of true knighthood — has been more perfectly set forth in sensuous guise, than in this poem. At no point in his works do I recall a passage so spontaneous, so eloquent, so great and just in its subjection of artistic medium to the thought, as Gaw. 2374–2388. Between these two extremes I would place The Pearl, which shares in some degree the immaturity of the first with the maturity of the last.<sup>2</sup>

More important to us than the poet's name is a knowledge of his status in life, and of his true nature. His intimate acquaintance with the Bible and his use of theological material have been, I think, too hastily accepted as proof conclusive that he was an ecclesiastic.<sup>3</sup> In the fourteenth century such knowledge and interests were not surprising in a lay-poet. They are both found in Chaucer, and religious and homiletic subjects were a commonplace among contemporary lay-poets.<sup>4</sup> But strong sympathy with the religious life is evident in all the poet's works, and he seems to have been one of the many in his time who ‘ wolde ben in religion, but þei mowe not’ for various external conditions of their lives.<sup>1</sup> It has already been noticed that the poet’s use of Scripture is not after the traditional manner of ecclesiastics, but rather in the sensuous manner of a poet ; and further, that his theological utterance is of a kind proceeding rather from a personal than a professional impulse.<sup>2</sup> In all his known works there is but one brief allusion to the corruption of the clergy,<sup>3</sup> and that is devoid of bitter raillery. We may wonder that one who at all times illustrated purity should have confined himself to this single protest ; but it would be the more remarkable if he, as an ecclesiastic, were in a position to see the corruption at closer range, and be the more revolted by it. Further indications that he was a layman appear in the decidedly unecclesiastical tone of his glorification of marriage at Purity 697–704, and in the maiden’s advice, ‘I rede þe forsake þe worlde wode,’<sup>4</sup> which she would hardly have given if he had already forsaken it. L. 1210, speaking of the host which ‘ þe prestes vus scheweȝ vch a daye,’ shows the wording of a layman.<sup>5</sup>

We must not overlook the fact that, though the religious element in the poet's works is large, the secular element is larger, and that, if Purity and Patience are earlier than The Pearl, and Gawain later, his tendency was continually away from the expressly religious to the secular. His reading in secular literature, and his adoption of its artistic methods, are already obvious enough ; and withal, the most perfect and apparently the latest of his works is wholly within the field of romance.

Readers of the Gawain find various phases of life about a feudal castle brought before them in many vivid and minute details. The splendor and delight of feast in hall, the tapestries and furnishings, the knight's chamber, his armament, the devotions of the household, the day spent indoors or without, the hunt in all its episodes varied according to the game — these have all evidently been at some time every-day matters to the poet, and he describes them with lively but innocent enthusiasm. They seem to be part of the poet's own life — not as a servant or menial, but as one who entered into them equally with his host, or perhaps had bounteously supplied them to others.<sup>1</sup> The nature of his spiritual struggle seems not that of one who has had hard external conditions to contend with, and whose nature and expression had become embittered by them. If a man in mind and soul equal to our poet is protected against poverty, physical suffering, and the spurning and neglect of the unworthy, his struggle arises in another way, usually from inner difficulties of philosophy and faith, precipitated by grief, affliction, or temptation of private nature. Such appears to have been the condition and experience of our poet.

At the same time he was a person who had enjoyed great advantages. His reading, both religious and secular, shows this. Nor is it likely that such reading could have been acquired in the remote Northwest of England. His skill in argument, and his occasional use of a term such as ‘pretermynable’ and ‘property,’ indicate the clerk.<sup>1</sup> Along with this is the frequent reflection of the courtly life, and of familiarity with the best manners both of men and women, all of which suggests wide experience in the world, not only at the University, but in noble households.<sup>2</sup> In the best sense our poet was an aristocrat.<sup>3</sup> His regard for gentle breeding and bearing is implied throughout the Gawain, as well as in The Pearl, and is virtually declared in Purity (35–50).

A man of this condition, yet unobtrusive and unambitious as our poet clearly is, would naturally not be emulous of poetic fame, and it is not to be wondered at that his works, superior as they are, were so little known as to survive in a unique manuscript, while his name is lost. He was probably content with the mere act of self-expression, and indifferent, as more than one great poet has been, to the survival or fate of his work. He could not have been blind to the evils of his time, nor have turned with weak optimism from them, but he seems to have had more faith in the power of an ideal positively set forth, than in the storm and strife of continual protest. He clung with warm conservatism to the old, both in religion and literature,<sup>1</sup> and yet the clear emergence of his own personality and experience through his expression is a distinct characteristic of the Renaissance.

<sup>2</sup> He may have studied at Oxford or Paris. His clerkship in either case does not necessarily imply even the lowest of ecclesiastical orders. Cf. Rashdall, Universities of Europe 2. 637, 645, 646.

Finally, he is one to whom the lighter attachments of life are nothing without deep and intimate association with at least one other soul, and his devotion in this kind, as shown in The Pearl, is one of his finest traits. Sweet-natured, courtly, devout, impassioned, patient, enthusiastic over the beauty of life, he may indeed seem weak to a generation setting greatest store by supreme self-confidence and big achievement in material things. But a deeper wisdom recognizes in these very traits the greatest strength — strength to make the distinction between veiled good and evil, both within himself and in the world about him; strength to enjoy the good in all purity; strength to fight evil until he achieves a quiet triumph beyond necessity of compromise; and, above all, strength to submit his life to the direction of God, and overcome the weakness of believing only in his own powers and obeying his own feelings.<sup>2</sup>

The Pearl is not the greatest of the poet's works, though it may be the most complex and difficult. Its highly artificial metre involves the necessity of artificial dialect and occasionally distorted meanings and syntax, and this is in opposition to full facility of expression or spontaneity of feeling.<sup>1</sup> But such defects scarce need to be mentioned, since they are sure, at the first readings, to assume more than their just proportion, and can hardly sink to their proper value, even as one becomes wholly familiar with the technical practices of the Northern school. The present-day narrow insistence upon technique as the most desirable thing in art should blind no one to the more essential excellence of The Pearl. But small apology for its technique is necessary, for, in spite of all restraints of medium, the expression is rapid and direct, yet not prolix, and the structure carries, when required, the full strain of the poet's strongest passion.

Since it employs various devices already familiar to readers of mediæval Romance poetry, The Pearl has been too hastily called conventional. But a traditional device or expedient, when beautified anew, and reinfused with feeling, is no longer conventional. In this sense unconventional is our poet's use of the dream, the garden, the apotheosis of the maiden, the debate, and the vision of heaven. Two qualifications, then — his pure delight in physical beauty, and his capacity for strong and noble passion — not merely relieve the poem of conventionality, but endow it with such artistic and spiritual greatness as it possesses.

Profuse and splendid are the sensuous beauties of

The Pearl. Mingled with the flowers and lawns and fair waters of romance and legend are the rocks, cliffs, and forests of the North, gleaming with unnatural lustre. Twice are the glories of Heaven reviewed, once in brief prelude (867–888), and again in the more distinct vision beheld by the poet himself (985–1152). The reader might well object to the unreality and luxuriance of it all, were it not evident that the poet has his material under absolute control, as is shown, not only by his rapidity and conciseness, but by the arrangement of details and the quality of certain of them. For example, in the first episode in Paradise, there is a distinct progress in splendor, passing from cliffs and forests to finer and richer details of flowers, birds, pebbles, and stream, all culminating in the wonderful portrait of the maiden, which, though elaborate and dazzling, is, at the same time, simple, sweet, and tender. In like manner each of the crowded glories in the picture of the New Jerusalem is in its place, and that too by a complete rearrangement of details selected from the Biblical account ; there, in order, are described the foundations, the streets, houses, gates, the great throne, the river, the trees of life; and then, like the transporting beauty of the full moon rising at twilight, emerges the procession of the redeemed, with the elders and angels, amid clouds of incense and the full diapason of the heavenly anthem ; and lastly, the glorification of Christ himself arrayed in spotless white, yet meek and tender, bearing still the marks of his passion, and near him the Pearl and her companions, rejoicing with perfect joy.

In all this there is perhaps lacking the mystery which should go with such description. It may seem too literal. But this defect is, in part, overcome by the feeling which permeates every detail of the work. Analysis shows line after line interwoven with the descriptive part of the poem, which reveal the emotional reflex upon the poet of his own picture.<sup>1</sup>

But in another, and far more important way, the poet's emotion enhances the artistic excellence of the poem. At first his feelings seem multifarious and almost spasmodic ; they appear successively as poignant grief, despondency, resentment, love, joy, quick reaction to grief and impatience ; then indignation and humility in confused succession, resolving by degrees into ecstatic transport, which subsides into quiet regret, and lastly into perfect tranquillity. But multifarious as they may seem, they are but various manifestations of one single emotion — a subtle and urgent yearning for peace in the poet's heart. It is by this means that the widely discrepant elements of the poem, which we have examined above, are combined and wrought into one artistic whole ; that grief and joy in the secular garden of Romance lead naturally to a discussion exploring the mystery of God's ways, this to a description of the life of the blessed, this to a direct vision of the heavenly glories, and this finally to the calm of attainment. In these last episodes, the vision of Heaven and the close, the poem is both greatest and most difficult to appreciate. The vision, notwithstanding its exclusion of symbolism and its concreteness in all respects, is not a mere spectacular indulgence — an excuse for invention of theatricalities.<sup>1</sup> No such peace of mind as that of the last stanza can be derived from such a source. The effect upon the poet of contemplating the mysteries of the invisible is only what it should be in some degree upon any one who can command the vision. He and the enlightened men of his time realized better than we, what it is hardest of all to take seriously to-day, that the visible world draws all its vitality and worth from the invisible, without which it is dead; and that some realization of the celestial consort singing ‘in endless morn of light’ is more vital to the human soul than all the worldly wisdom the mind can hold or practise.

Thus it is that the spirit reflected in the last stanza is a true one, where, with contending emotions now resolved into one, the poet is free henceforth to work and worship, unhindered by doubts and remorse and small ambitions, and drawing continually nearer to the pure companionship which is dearer to him than all things else.

A comparison of The Pearl with Chaucer is like a comparison of Dante and Milton with Shakespeare. The singers of the world about us will always have many listeners, while they who hearken to the singers of the unseen world will be few in number. Furthermore, the author of The Pearl has not, like Dante and Milton, attempted an interpretation of invisible things for the world at large. His poem lies within the limits of one man's narrow though profound experience, and is not addressed to the many. Yet the few who enter deeply into his experience with him may find therein revealed to them, as to the poet himself, the most difficult mysteries of life.

Notes

I. perle. On the significance of the word in this poem see pp. xxii, xxxii ff.

plesaunte, etc. A similar phrase at E. E. T. S. 24. 14 :

Mi lyf to lede in word & dede
As is moost plesaunt to thi pay.

Prynces. Christ ; cf. 1164, 1176, 1188, 1189, 1201, 1212. Perhaps as a secondary meaning any prince is implied ; cf. Böddeker 145. 7 : ‘Coral ycud wiþ cayser ant knyht.’ That i f. are not apostrophe, but mere exclamation, is indicated by the third person in the next sentence.

2. The difficulties of this vague line are two-fold : (1) the meaning of to clanly clos ; (2) the intended figurative meaning of the whole line. (1) to may be an error for so, long s and t being written alike except for the short final stroke ; or, as G. says, the expression means “‘Too cleanly enclosed’” (i. e. for earthly existence).’ But clanly clos is a common alliterative phrase (cf. Gaw. 1298 ; Destr. Troy 9616, 9620, 10586, 10784, 13793 ; Awnt. Arth. 288 ; Alex. 1837), and clanly may thus be used here rather for alliteration than meaning. To may thus belong to the more significant clos, the sense being ‘too fast (though decently) enclosed for my present happiness.’ Or clanly may mean ‘completely,’ in which case to could modify it. (2) golde is probably the coffer, i. e. Paradise, as intimated in 259–272. Perhaps the poet recalled the traditions of seven heavens, described by the child Ipotis (Horstmann, 1881, p. 342 ; cf. 512) ; cf. ll. 69 ff. :

þe feorþe heuene is gold iliche,
Ful of precious stones riche ;
To Innocens [var. Innocentes, p. 512] þat place is diht.

See also citation from Ephrem’s hymn on the death of children, 735 n. The maiden’s innocence is an important theme in The Pearl, esp. 661–720. Cf. the same figure in O. E. Misc. 98. 178–182 :

þe ymston [Mary] of þi bur,
 He is betere an hundred folde þan all þeos in heore culur.
 He is idon in heouene golde,
     And is ful of fyn amur.

The line may contain also a secondary allusion to the maiden's tomb (cf. 22), where the poet mourns, and where he conceives his poem. The phrase clanly clos, in varied forms, applies most frequently to the enclosing of the body in the tomb, as in the passages cited at the beginning of this note; golden tombs and reliquaries are common in Northern alliterative poems. Thus Memnon's bones are entombed by his brother (Destr. Troy 13791 ff.), who

Closit horn ful clanly in a clere vessell,
 All glyssonond of gold & of gay stony.

Cf. Morte Arth. 1163 ff.; 3991 f.; Alex. 4452, 5592. The poet may have provided costly sepulture for the child.

3. Cf. 'out of þe Orient,' Alex. 94, 1111; also Destr. Troy 151, 5488, 5487, 10807. Pearls of the Orient were distinguished in commerce from the less valuable ones of the West. See Migne, as cited at 217 n.

5. So in the Life of St. Margaret, once ascribed to Barbour, the pearl 'is lytil and rond als'a' (17), and in Lydgate's Life 'rounde and small' (34). Cf. 190, 738, and p. 28.

6. smal. Cf. 190. Ladies are frequently thus described in Romance; cf. Erle of Tolous 352: 'Hur syde longe, hyr myddyll small.' So E. E. T. S. 15. 76. 54; Bone Florence 393, 479.

7. Cf. Morte Arth. 862: 'The gentileste jowelle ajuggede with lordes.'

9. erbere. 'The original characteristic of the "arbour" seems to have been the floor and "benches" of herbage; in the modern idea (since the 16th c. at least) the leafy covering is the prominent feature.' — N. E. D.

10. hit. The sudden change from the neut. pron. (cf. 13, 41) indicates an imperfect identification of the symbol with the object symbolized. It seems the more remarkable, since in Pur. 1117–1128 the fem. pron. only is used of the pearl, and that too without any evident personification. Cf. p. xxxv, and 737 and n.

11. dewyne, for dwyne; cf. dowyne, 326; borozt, 628, bereste, 854, mynyster, 1063.

of luf-daungere. Construe with dewyne. ?Sense

17. þat. ‘Which [being missed] doth’ etc.

þrange. Cf. Burns, Holy Fair 18: ‘thick an’ thrang.’

18. Cf. Destr. Troy 5052: ‘bolne at þe brest all for bale angre’; also 5066.

19. sange. Meaning perhaps this poem, or at least the poet’s first conception of it. See p. xvii, n. 2.

22. Cf. 215; 320, 857, and nn.

25, 35. spyse3. In O. E. Misc. 98, a virgin is called ‘swettture þan eny spis.’ Spices grow in the garden of love, Rom. Rose 1331 ff., and in the land of Cockayne; cf. 43 n., 46 n. With the thought of this stanza and the next G. compares Ham.

5. 2: And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring.

In Memoriam 18:

And from his ashes may be made
The violets of his native land.

Herrick’s Dirge of Jephtha bears closer resemblance:

Sleep in thy peace, thy bed of spice,
And make this place all Paradise :
May sweets grow here ! and smoke them hence
Fat frankincense.

Let balm and cassia send their scent
From out thy maiden monument.

26. Cf. 958. G. cites Pur. 1079: ‘þer watȝ rose refrayr where rote hatȝ ben euer.’

27. Of Romance origin. Cf. Rom. Rose 896: ‘Ne fleur inde, jaune, ne blanche’; also 1413, 1556; Guillaume de Machault,
ed. Tarbé, p. 12; ‘Fleurettes Blanches, jaunes, vermillettes’; Jubinal, Nouv. Recueil 58; J. de Condé, ed. Scheler, 3. 4. 94, 95;
Chaucer, Parl. Foules 186; Dunbar, Thistle and Rose 18, 19.

30. dunne. For the adj. thus used as a noun see 190 and n., 1050 and n.

33. Cf. Milton, P. L. 9. 973: ‘For of good still good proceeds.’

38. erber. In apposition with spot.

39. See p. xvi.

41. huyle. Not 'while' as in M. and G.; the meaning 'mound' is indicated by per, and the general context; cf. also 62; 1172, 1173, 1205.

hit. See 384 n.

43. In Alex. 5426 serpents eat of 'gyloffre & of gingere.' The same spices, with mace, galingale, 'sedwale' and 'canel,' grow all on one tree in Land of Cockayne 71-77.

44. *pyony*s. Peonies are ranked in beauty with roses and lilies by Froissart, L'Espinette Amoureuse 306; La Prison Amoureuse 876.

45 f. The protasis and apodosis are here equivalent to 'not only, . . . but also. . . .'

46. Wisdom says: 'Sicut cinnamomum et balsamum aromatizans odorem dedi: quasi myrrha electa dedi suavitatem odoris,' Ecclesiasticus 24. 20. The passage is in the Epistle appointed for the 'hyȝ seysoun,' 39.

50. So 'careȝ colde,' 808. A common phrase in M. E. Thus Awnt. Arth. 151, 2: 'Now ame I caugte oute of kide to cares so colde, into care am I caughte'; Böddeker 104. 61: 'y kippe & cacche cares ful colde'; cf. 153. 52. 51. Cf. 339.

51. deruely is an adj. at Curs. Mundi 1143 ('bold, rash'): 'bi derfly dede has liknes nan.' Regularly an adv. (= 'quickly'), as at Pur. 632, 1641; Pat. 110; Gaw. 2334 (= 'boldly').

52. Cf. 665 n. As Schofield notes, Reason in similar manner comforts the lover in Rom. Rose.

53. Identical rimes occur also at 1108, 1112; cf. p. xlviij.

55. kynde of Kryst is in strongest contrast with my wretched wylle, 56; see 290 n.

56. Introverted alliteration. The other examples are 74, 143, 287, 290, 862, 960, 1027, 1093, 1171.

59. In Pat. 192 Jonah is upbraided for sleeping during 'such slætēs of sorȝe' as the storm at sea; and in the Morte Art. 2676, slain birds are 'sleghte one slepe with slaughte of þe pople.' Slyde and slyppe are both used of going to sleep. Cf. Destr. Troy 6, 2378.

64. Cf. Gaw. 93, 95:

Of sum auenturus þyng an vncouȝe tale,
Of sum mayn meruayle, þat he myȝt trawe,
Of alderes, of armes, of oþer auenturus.

65. Cf. Chauc. House of Fame, 128 ff.; Wyn. and Wast. 46–48:

And I was swythe in a sweuen sweped be-lyue.
Me thoghte I was in the werlde I ne wiste in whate ende,
One a loueliche lande þat was ylike grene.

68. rych rokke3. Not from Mandeville (Schofield, 190), but, like ‘rich river’ (cf. 105 n.), a convention of alliterative poetry. Cf. Gol. and Gaw. 238.

71. webbe3. Such, perhaps, as those in Alex. 1524: ‘Of Inde, Of bright blysrand blew, browden with sternes.’ In the same passage the bishop is attired ‘With erst an abite vndire all. . . . Fulle of bridis & of bestis, of bise & of purpre ; And þat was garnest full gay with golden skirtis, Store star and stanes, strekilland all ouire, Sandid full of safirs.’ Then a cape ‘With riche rabies of gold railed bi þe hemmes, A vestoure . . . of violet floures, Wroȝt full of wodwose and oþer wild bestis.’ Then doctors ‘in tonacles of tarrayn webbis, . . . bret-full of bees all þe body ouire.’ So in Wyn. and Wast. 91 ff. is a mantle ‘brouderde with fewlys, ffawkons of fyne golde flakerande with wynges’ ; and a belt embroidered ‘with drakes and with dukkes daderande þam semede ffor ferdnes of fawcons fete, less fawked þay were.’ Cf. the tapestry ‘stuffed wyth ymagerye’ in Emare 82–168, and see the colored reproductions in Viollet-le-Duc, Dictionnaire du Mobilier, vol. 3.

74. crystal klyffe3. Cf. 159. Crystal is a frequent embellishment in M. E. poetry. Cf. Land of Cockayne 68; Destr. Troy 8752. In Alex. 4825 is a crystal cliff.

75. holte-wode3. The same compound in Phœnix 171; Gaw. 742; Destr. Troy 1350.

76 f. Such grouping of similes is common in The Pearl. It occurs at 114, 115; 212, 213; 607, 608; 801, 802; 1018, 1025, 1026; 1112, 1115. It appears also in the other poems by our author, especially in Pur. and Pat., and has important bearing upon the question of common authorship. See Thomas, p. 12.

76 ff. A similar tree is found in Priam’s palace, Destr. Troy 4960 ff.:

The bole was of bright gold, bret to þe myddes,

The brede of his bowes borly to se,

Large and longe (light as the sun)
 The braunches were borly, sum of bright gold,
 Sum siluer for sothe, semlist of hew ;
 With leuys full luffly, light of þe same ;
 With burions above bright to beholde
 And frut on yt fourmyt fairest of shap
 . . . . .
 þat shemert as shire as any shene stony.

Cf. the tree of the sun, Alex. 5002 ff. :

þire boles was as þe boke sayes, borly & hize,
 þe lind of þe lȝt sone, louely clethid,
 With feylour as of fine gold þat ferly faire lemes, þat oþir loken ouire with leues as it ware lȝt siluir.

In the temple of the sun are gold vines with fruit of carbuncles and pearls, Alex. 4899 ff. ; cf. 3666 ff. ; and the garden of Fortune (Morte Art. 3243) is filled with silver vines bearing gold grapes. Such landscape as this in The Pearl is ascribed by Coli to an oriental origin (Il Paradiso Terrestre p. 161).

80. schymerynge. Not an adjective.

83. arn is to be supplied.

87. Cf. Bocc. 35 ff. :

Non sentis odores
 Insolitos silvis, nemus hoc si forte sabeum
 Fecisset natura parens ?

The fragrance of fruit is noticed at Alex. 4809, where are ‘berybobis . . . brethand as mirre.’ Cf. Chauc., Cant. Tales A 3262.

89 ff. A passage far exceeding in its exquisite beauty the longer bird-passages in Rom. Rose 480 ff., 647 ff. ; Book of the Duchess 294 ff., and in sweet spontaneity, Cowper’s Miltonic lines (Task I. 200 ff.) :

Ten thousand warblers cheer the day, and one
 The livelong night ; nor these alone, whose notes
 Nice-fingered art must emulate in vain.

It is approached in spontaneity by Parl. of the Thre Ages 13–15. The whole passage of this inaccessible text may be quoted as a charming description of the dawn :

Als I habade one a banke be a bryme syde,
 There the gryse was grene growen with floures —
 The primrose, the pervynke, and piliole be riche —
 The dewe appon dayses donkede full faire,
 Burgons & blossoms & braunches full swete,
 And the mery mystes full myldely gane falle.
 The cukkanwe, the cowschote — kene were þay bothen ;
 And the throstills full throly threp[ð]en in the bankes,
 And iche foule in that frythe faynere þan oþer
 That the derke was done & the daye lightenede.

91. sytole-string. N. E. D., s. v. citole, cites Stainer, Music of the Bible, p. 51 ; and Grove, Dict. Mus. s. v.

gyternere. g is hard ; cf. O. F. guitarne.

The poet's art is shown in preferring the mention of two instruments to the longer lists usual in Romance poetry. Both 'citole' and 'gyterne' are included in the lists at Rom. Rose 22031 ff. (cf. 22018), and in Guill. de Machault, ed. Scheler, p. 87 ; and the 'gynterne' in Deschamps, Ballade cxxiv.

93. So the poet represents the birds poised on the branches of the golden candlesticks, Pur. 1484 : 'As þay with wynges upon wynde hade waged her fyþeres.'

105. Cf. Gaw. 511 :

And blossomȝ blue to blowe
 Bi raweȝ ryȝt and ronk.

ryȝt reuereȝ. The phrase is common in M. E. alliterative verse ; cf. Morte Arth. 62, 1455, 2279 ; Gol. and Gaw. 248 ; Alex. 4822.

106. fyldor. Gold thread or or de Cypre of the Middle Ages, much used in embroideries (Migne, Dict. d'Orfèvrerie Chrétienne, s. v. or). The poet doubtless thinks of it as so applied here, and there is no little poetic force in the conception of a slope covered with leaves and flowers as embroidered in bright colors. Cf. the starry turf in Van Eyck's Adoration of the Lamb. 'Fildore' is inwoven with the mane of the green knight's horse in Gaw. 189.

brent. Prob. 'steep' as at Pur. 379, Gaw. 2165, though M. and G. render 'bright,' confusing with brend, burnt, 989 ; Gaw. 195.

108. Lorde ! Cf. 1149, 1199. More dignified than now.

III. swangeande. A different word from swange, 1059; perhaps it should be spelled swengeande < O. E. swengan, rush. A kindred noun occurs at Destr. Troy 342, where a river 'with a swonghe and a swetnes sweepit on þe grunde.'

III ff. The description of the river in Rom. Rose 104–128 is at once more diffuse and poorer than this. No mention is made of jewels in the 'founce,' though they occur thus in a description by Watriquet, Li Dis de la Fontaine etc. 43–57. Cf. the M. E. Floris and Blauncheflur 693 ff.; Land of Cockayne 87–94. If The Pearl is here dependent on the Mandeville description of a lake in Ceylon (cf. Schofield 190), it is strange that nothing is said of pearls, which are there recorded as abounding in the bottom of the lake. The word founce, 113, is not necessarily a bringing over of founs in Mandeville, though it probably is so at Pur. 1026; cf. Brown, p. 149. The word occurs in the same connection in the French passages just cited, and at Alex. 4130.

112. rourde. The word has figurative force here, as shown by its origin, and by its use at Pur. 390; Pat. 64; Gaw. 1149, 1916, where, in each case, it refers to the sound of voices. At Gaw. 1698 is mentioned the 'rurde of hornes' at the hunt.

114. See 76 n.

115. strope. M. guessed 'bold, fierce,' < O. E. strūpan; Stratmann (Dict.) derives from O. N. strōpinn; G. (Acad. 40. 37) accepts strōpinn, defining 'lewd, licentious.' In Gaw. 1710 the hunted fox 'steleȝ out ful stilly bi a strothe rande.' The context indicates 'hidden, close, secure,' a meaning not inappropriate here. E. M. Wright (Eng. Stud. 36. 223) associates with Scott. strouthy, 'strong' (Eng. Dial. Dict.), and makes strothe in Gaw. another word.

With 115, 116 cf. Chaucer, C. T., Prol. 268 (cited by Kölbing), where eyes shine 'As doon the sterres in the frosty night.' Cf. Alex. 3796: 'As ai stremande sternes stared all þaire wedis'; and Destr. Troy 7348: 'The sternes full stithly starond o lofte.' These passages illustrate the superiority of this simile in The Pearl, both in application and expression, even as compared with Chaucer. Out of the liquid, receding depths of the stream shine these trembling points of light in colors pure and varied, as the stars gleam, 'far-drawn and remote,' from the blue depths of a winter sky. See 1093 and n.

126. bredful. Scandinavian. The native word brurdful (O. E. brerd) occurs at Pur. 383.

128. Cf. Gol. and Gaw. 276: ‘Or he be strenyeit with strenth.’

131 f. A similar thought at 1195; cf. Alex. 4397: “Bot ay mekill wold haue mare, as many man spellis”; and the fine warning in Gol. and Gaw. 287 ff.:

The wy that wendis forto were, quhen he wenys best,
All his will in this warld, with welthis Iwys,
Yit sall be licht as leif of the lynd lest,
That welteris doun with the wynd, sa wauerand it is.

On the poet’s attitude toward Fortune compared with the fashion of his time see p. liv, n. 2.

134. Cf. Destr. Troy 307: ‘I haue no tome for to telle.’

137 f. So Guill. de Machault of the garden of his vision, Dit du Vergier, Œuvres 13:

Je ne scay que ce poot estre
Fors que le paradis terrestre.

And Watriquet, Dit de la Feste du Comte de Flandre 58 f.:

Car il sembloient à la gent
De paradis fussent issu.

Cf. Rom. Rose 640; Watriquet, Li Tournois des Dames 52 ff.; Alex. 4905.

139. hoped. Not with modern meaning; cf. 142, 185.

140. myrþeȝ. M. (Acad. 39. 603) suggests myrcheȝ, ‘boundaries.’ G’s suggested reading, ‘Bytwene mereȝ by Myrthe made,’ seems more probable; he points out that it is Mirth (Deduis) who contrives the conduits by which the wells are fed in Rom. Rose 1391–1403, thus rendered in the M. E. version: ‘stremys smale that by devyse Mirthe hadde done come through condyse.’ But the garden in Rom. Rose was not Paradise, and one may question whether our poet would transfer Guillaume’s Mirth to his own description of this place.

146. Preposition frequently postpositive in the relative clause; so 425, 656, 824, 957, 1132; rel. om., 925; other cases, apparently due to requirement of rime, &c.: 146, 438, 464, 470, 598, 676, 734, 1054, 1127.

149 ff. Cf. Rom. Rose 497 ff. :

Quant j'oi les oisiaus chanter,
Forment me pris à démenter
Par quel art ne par quel engin
Je porroie entrer ou jardin.

162. mayden of menske. Schofield (M. L. P. 19. 172) associates this phrase with a similar expression in Seinte Marharete, E. E. T. S. 13, p. 14, l. 27, but the combination was frequent; cf. Böddeker, Gloss. s. v. menske; Parl. of the Thre Ages 114. On the maiden's age in Paradise see supra, p. xxv, n. 3.

164 ff. In radiance and feeling this portrait surpasses similar contemporary ones. Cf. Chaucer, Book of the Duchess 817 ff., Ferumbras 5880 ff., Destry 3019–3084.

165. golde þat man con schere. I. e., gold cut into fine threads; the Pearl's hair is compared to schorne golde, 213; cf. fyl dor fyn, 106 and n.; Gaw. 189. The meaning 'purify' (M. and G.) is impossible, since (1) initial Scand. sk is in all cases preserved in these poems (Knigge 88); (2) the participle of skere would not be, as he makes it, schorne, 213. Although fil d'or was produced by stretching (cf. Migne, Dict. d'Orfèvrerie Chrét. s. v. or), the poet may think of the skeins cut into the proper length for use in embroidery.

168. Cf. 180, 600. The combination of lenger and more was a M. E. idiom. Cf. Chaucer, Complaint unto Pity 94–95:

Let som streem of your light on me be sene
That love and drede you, ay lenger the more.

Squieres Tale 404: 'Ever lenger the more'; O. E. Hom. 1. 215: 'so lengre so more.' The poet's fondness of playing with these comparatives leads him into incoherent extravagance at 600.

M. construes this line with 169, making no pause. I have followed G. in construing 168 with the preceding lines, and 169 with 170 ff. This makes the syntax of 169 ff. somewhat loose, but the fault is common in this poem.

169 ff. In their emotional quality the next two stanzas are among the loveliest of the poem, revealing as they do the poet's ecstasy, his sudden diffidence, a sharp involuntary pang of remorse as the maiden's eyes meet his, his fear that she may vanish before he can speak, and yet his natural perturbation at a ghostly apparition — then his agony interrupted and forgotten as the maiden in her unearthly beauty rises and comes toward him. The sudden self-conscious embarrassment (174), coming at the moment in his transport when the dreamer tries to act, is observed with exquisite precision.

184. hawk. The falcon is an image of good appearance at Böddeker 146. 25; Candace (Alex. 5257) ‘was so faire & so fresche, as faucon hire semed.’

185. Cf. Bocc. 5 ff. :

Nam coram genite voces et dulcis ymago
Stant equidem ; timeo falli, quia sepe per umbras
Illusere dij stolidos.

188. Perhaps an allusion to the old belief that a ghost cannot speak until it has been spoken to. See Brand, Pop. Ant., ed. Ellis, London, 1849, 3. 70.

190. seme slyȝt. Cf. 30, 189, 260, 386, 880, 919, 1050 and n.

191. araye ryalle. Cf. Pur. 812. Such combinations are found much later; cf. Spenser’s Pride ‘in royall rich array’ (F. Q. 1. 4. 17).

195. Cf. 753, and Rom. Rose 1005: ‘Blanche comme flor de lis’; Deschamps, Ballade 940, Œuvres, ed. le Queux, 5. 186.

196. Cf. Alex. 5243: ‘hai bow up to a banke & þe burgh neȝes’; and Destr. Troy 5863: ‘bowet fro the batell to þe bonke side.’ Cf. 974.

197. bleaunt of biys. G. reads beau mys (accepted by M., Acad. 39. 602), making mys = amys, ‘amice’; this is untenable on three accounts: (1) the aphetic form mys is unknown; (2) neither of the two kinds of amice — whether the priest’s fur hood, or the square of white linen worn on the head by the celebrant — would have been in any way appropriate here; (3) it cannot rightly be distorted to mean ‘tunic’ (G., ed., 14. 5 n.), and in its proper sense does not correspond to the description in the following lines (cf. Planché, Cyclopedia of Costume 1. 7). In making any correction of the line the whole description of the girl’s costume must be considered. It appears to be that of the late fourteenth century. First is the close-fitting cortel (203), reaching from shoulders to feet, and having long, close-fitting sleeves. Over this is the bleaunt (163), or surcot, of looser cut, sometimes sleeveless, sometimes having loose sleeves reaching to the elbows, whence hung long 'lappez' (201). That these belonged to the bleaunt, and not to the kirtle, appears from Morte Arth. 3255, where Fortune wears a surcot 'with ladily lappes the lenghe of a þerde.' These laps were sometimes loose folds, but later mere strips, and nearly reached the ground. The surcot or bleaunt was sometimes cut open at the sides from the bottom toward the waist (vpon at syde, 198), through which openings a kirtle of 'self sute' would appear. This last feature was more common in the fifteenth century (cf. Racinet, Le Costume Historique vol. 4, pl. C. P.). The surcot, when sleeveless, had wide openings at the sides reaching from the shoulder to the waist, but these openings can hardly be designated in 198, since, in the absence of sleeves, there could be no laps. Holman Hunt, in the frontispiece designed for G.'s edition, gives the maiden such a surcot, and attaches the laps to the kirtle. I am unable to discover that such an arrangement is historic. See Viollet-le-Duc, Dict. Raisonné du Mobilier Français 3 and 4, s. v. bliaut, cotte, surcot; H. Weiss, Kostümkunde 4. 76-80; Planché, Cycl., s. v. kirtle. Finally, considering rime, alliteration, and sense, a possible reading for beau mys is bleaunt of biys, i. e., surcot of fine linen (cf. Rev. 19. 8). In partial support of this emendation, it should be noticed that b and w are almost identical characters in the MS., and that in writing uiys the scribe may have read w for b, and written u, which he frequently interchanges with w. Cf. nine examples in Mätzner, s. v. bis, among which is a 'curtull of purpur bys,' Launfal 284.

200. yzen. Doubtless here intended as an oxytone for rime.

203. In Darius' hall of gold (Alex. 2927 ff.) were þe burde and þe benche betyn of þe same,

The vessell to vyse on veraly of þe same,
And all þe sale of a sute.

Less remote is Pur. 1457 — basins of gold 'and eweres of sute'; cf. Chauc., Cant. Tales A 3242. Supply watȝ; cf. 83.

204. Cf. Erk. 78 f. :

Al wt glisnande golde his gowne wos hemmyd,
Wl mony a precious perle picchit þer-one.

209. Perhaps in allusion to the elaborate head-dress of the poet's time, or of such figures in Rom. Rose as Oiseuse, Raison, and Richesse. Girls wore their hair more simply, however; see Strutt, Dress and Habits of England 2, pl. 89.

herle. The word occurs at Gaw. 190, meaning 'twist, fillet,' such as would be imbraided with the hair. Alliteration suggests it as the reading here. The sense would then be, 'On her head she had no imbraided fillet besides.'

210. The difficulties of this line consist in the MS. reading lere leke, and in umbegon. The passage is almost certainly defective. I have taken here-leke as meaning 'locks of hair,' and umbegon as pres. 3 pl., with hyr as its object. On the other hand, in Gaw. 1830, leke is a pret., meaning apparently 'hung' (O. N. leika ?, pret. lek). If in Pearl 210 we render leke 'hung,' then umbegon must be a passive part., 'surrounded, encircled,' which cannot be construed; nor, apparently, is umbegon ever intransitive, as G. assumes.

211. her semblaunt sade. So Destr. Troy 3791, 'Sad of his semblaundes.' Cf. Gol. and Gaw. 428.

for doc oper erle. A common tag in M. E. poetry; see Destr. Troy 9799, 12694; Alex. 64, 1166; Morte Arth. 409, 2626, 3529; Bone Florence 838; also Baudouin de Condé, ed. Scheler, I. 268. 19. The meaning of the line is, 'her countenance demure enough to suit, or befit, duke or earl,' as is indicated by Alex. 5298: 'It ware a daynte to deme for any duke oute.' So Morte Arth. 1941: 'Thow arte demyde, with dukes and erle, ffor one doughtyeste.'

212. whalle<sub>3</sub> bon. Though from the walrus, ivory was generally called whale's bone. The simile is common; cf. Böddeker 156. 40; 157. 67; Wynn. and Wast. 181. On the double simile in 212 f. see 76 n.

212 ff. Not unlike the description of the angels who visited Lot in Sodom, Pur. 790-794.

215. colour. At 753 colour implies whiteness, but here a ruddy hue. This mingling of white and red is a convention; cf. Destr. Troy 304 f.:

Hir chekes full choise as the chalke white,
As the rose was the rud þat raiked hom in.

Cf. Böddeker 156. 34; Watriquet, Dit de la Feste du Conte de

Flandre 295: 'si vermaus et si blanz'; also ib. 171, 186, 272, 273.

217 ff. The lavish use of pearls in the adornment of women's attire was increasingly fashionable from the middle of the fourteenth century. See citations in Migne, Dict. d'Orfèvrerie Chrét. s. v. perle. Ladies in Froissart are 'drut perlées' (Parad. d'Amours 968; Prison Am. 395).

218. at honde. Cf. Chaucer, Prol. 193: 'I seigh his sleues purfiled at the hond.'

221. perle. Like the great carbuncle on the crown of Richesse in Rom. Rose 1059-1114.

221. wythouten wemme. Cf. 737, 1003, and p. xxxii.

223-228. Cf. Dante's recognition of Beatrice in Paradise (Purg. 31. 139-145, tr. Butler): 'O splendor of eternal living light, who is there that has in such wise grown pale beneath the shadow of Parnassus, or has drunk at its cistern, that he would not seem to have his mind encumbered, trying to render thee as thou appeardest, . . . when thou didst in the open air disclose thyself?'

224. malte. The meaning 'sink, melt (into), enter' is suggested by Pur. 776, 1566, Gaw. 2080, Erk. 158; malte in hit mesure may mean 'enter into (comprehend) its measure of excellence.'

225. Like Boccaccio in another connection, Ecl. 14. 273 f.:

Quis gaudia silve
Enumerare queat? Quis verbis pandere? Nemo!

But the device is common in the poetry of the time. Cf. 1082, 1090, 1154.

230. water. In this construction really a genitive, though not regarded as such, since a phrase like on wyper half has come to be regarded as a compound preposition. Mätzner cites (Wörterb. 407<sup>2</sup>): 'A þas half þere Hambre,' Layamon, 2. 162 (ed. Madden); 'on oþer half þes wateres,' O. E. Misc. 146.

231. hejen in to Grece. So Gaw. 2025: 'þe gayest in to Grece'; cf. Rom. Rose 542 f.:

N'avoit jusqu'en Jhérusalen
Fame qui plus biau col portast.

Constantinople is mentioned in the same manner in Baudouin de Condé, ed. Scheler, 1. 1. 9; Jean de Condé, ib. 2. 291. 24; Froissart, L'Espinette Amoureuse 578; La Prison Amoureuse 67. So Böddeker 166. 18:

one of hem ich herie best from Irland in to Ynde.

Cf. Anglia 15. 189.

233. See p. xxxi.

235. spece. Rime requires spece, and etymology allows it, though spye is the usual spelling. The word may connote 'spice' in the surviving sense; cf. 'spice swettist of sauior,' of the Virgin, E. E. T. S. 24. 5. 29, and 47 n.

236. enclynande lowe. So Anectanabus before Olympias 'enclynes hire lawe,' Alex. 495; cf. Destr. Troy 2305, 2448.

238. lote. Cf. 896; Pat. 47; Gaw. 639, 'gentlyest knyȝt of lotē.'

243. by myn one. Cf. Gaw. 1048, 'al his one'; 1230, 2245, 'oure one.'

252. jueler. See 1-8. The frequency of the epithet may be reminiscent of the 'jueler' in the parable of the pearl of great price; cf. 734 and n. No symbolic meaning is discernible, however.

254. yȝen graye. The ladies of Romance usually have 'gray' eyes (meaning blue?). So Watriquet, Dit de la Feste du Conte de Flandre 67, 185; Awnt. Arth. 599; Böddeker 162. 24; Chaucer, Prol. 152 (cf. Skeat's note).

272. The whole passage shows both an imperfect identification of the symbol with its subject (259-261), and some confusion of thought.

274. 'That hath clearly made for thee something from nothing,' a pearl from an ephemeral rose.

280. Cf. 1197.

283. In Boccaccio, when Silvius at last recognizes in Olympia's companions his other dead children, he proposes games in honor of Pan:

Pueri, nudate palestras,
Et ludos agitote patrum.

Wine, garlands, and music he proposes also, and Olympia sings the song in honor of Christ.

284. Cf. Bocc. 135 ff.:

Quas oras, mea nata, refers? quas, deprecor, oras?
Nos omnes teget illa domus, somnosque quietos
Herba dabit viridis, etc.

285. A reminiscence, perhaps, of Ps. 119 (Vulg. 118). 174, 175; or 1. 2. Cf. Erk. 287 f.: ‘þi laghes, þat euer þou, lord, wos lowyd in.’

290. I follow G. The second ȝe merely reiterates men — a practice common in the poem (see 384 n.); cf. 1199; also 55, 267, 363, 1166. The madness of opposing one’s will to God’s is an important theme of the poem.

306. Cf. 650 n.

309. sorquydryȝe. The unorganic ȝ shows that in this position ȝ is virtually silent. Cf. rimes in st. 85; also ll. 645, 647, 1114, 1116. But at 1075 plyȝt rimes only with words in -ȝȝt.

313 f. ‘Judge now thyself whether thou didst speak idly according to the words which man ought to offer to God.’

315. bayly. -ly in derivations from French words in -li- may be either silent or uttered, as if it were M. E. -le. In 313, 315, 1083 it is silent, as shown by rimes; in 34 it is pronounced, and in 442 stressed. This bayly is to be distinguished from bayly 1083, being of different meaning and origin. The same variation of -y is indicated in pleny (O. F. pleigner), streny (estraindre), 549, 551; cf. strayn, 691; playned, 53; also atteny, 548; repreny, 544, and n.

320. keue. M. renders ‘depart’ (Gloss.), ‘plunge’ (note); G. guesses ‘grow’; Stratmann, ‘turn’; Murray (N. E. D. s. v. keve) says, ‘O. N. kefja, to dive, sink, has been suggested, but is scarcely satisfactory for the second passage’ (i. e. 981). Cf. 981 n., where breued is suggested as a possible reading. Wright, Dialect Dict., s. v. calve<sup>2</sup>, gives the definition ‘to crack in clods, as soil does in dry weather,’ and a form keeve, which, however, is referred to Suffolk.

The thought of mortal decay in this line is touched at 22, and 857 and n. In the next century it became very general, as is manifest in nearly all the arts. See Triggs, Lydgate’s Assembly of Gods, E. E. T. S. Extr. Ser. 69. xlvi-l.

324. Cf. a similar combination, Pat. 312: ‘In on daschande dam, dryueȝ me ouer’; cf. Pur. 416.

325. demeȝ you. Cf. 421 n.

325-328. Cf. Bocc. 159 f. :

In lacrimis oculos fundam tristemque senectam
Heu quibus in silvis post anxia fata requiram?

331. men. he, 332, would indicate man as more nearly correct, but sudden changes of number are characteristic of the poet; see 611 n.

333-335. 'I set at naught death and banishment if (for the rest of my life) I am to endure separation from my pearl.' His answer is an outbreak incoherent with impatience and despair ('rapely I raue'), a blind plunging and shrieking in vain against the narrow bounds of his confinement (345 ff.). An interesting parallel with this passage is Spenser, F. Q. 1. 10. 63, where the Red Cross Knight, in ecstasy at his vision of the New Jerusalem, exclaims:

O let me not (quoth he) then turne againe
Back to the world, whose joyes so fruitlesse are ;
But let me here for aye in peace remaine.

334. Cf. Pur. 287, where God, before the flood, says: 'I schal . . . fleme out of þe folde al þat flesch wereȝ,' i. e. destroy.

336 ff. Cf. Horstmann, Rich. Rolle 1. 44: 'For many lufes God whils þai er in ese, and in adversite þai grotche, & falles in swa mykel sarynes, þat vnneth may any man comforth þam; and swa sclawnder þai God, flytand and feghtand agayne his domes. And þat es a caytif louyng þat any welth of þe worlde makes; bot þat louyng es of mykel prycē þat na violence of sorow may do away.'

339. dyne of doel. Cf. 51.

lureȝ. If this is O. E. lyre, it is the only case in this poem except 358, where M. E. u represents y (ü) of O. E., though Knigge cites burde, Gaw. 613, 752, 942; Pur. 378, 653; fust, Pur. 1535; Gaw. 391; busmer, Pur. 653. Perhaps we should read lyreȝ. lureȝ of 358, may be mod. lour, 'frown, gloomy looks.'

344. Cf. Pat. 6 ff. :

And quo for þro may noȝt hole, þe þikker he sufferes ;
þen is better to abyde þe bur vmbestoundes,
þen ay þrow forth my þro, þaz me þynk ylle.

345. Cf. animal similes at 184, 1085. Such allusions may arise from the poet's interest in the hunt, which underlies the following fine passages : Gaw. 1126-1177; 1319-1371; 1412-1470; 1561-1622; 1690-1732; 1893-1921.

349. deme, adyte. Hortatory ; cf. 710. M. (Acad. 39. 603; 40. 76) assigns adyte to a Romance origin on account of the spelling. G. (Acad. 40. 37) derives it from O. E. ādīhtan; see 309 n.

357. Cf. 55.

358. leme. G. glosses 'gleam, glint,' and translates 'glide,' which latter meaning is not recorded. The context points to lurez as the object of leme. I suggest O. N. lemja, 'beat, flog' as the origin of leme. lurez is probably 'frowns' (see 339 n.), and of is adv., 'away.' The sense would be then, 'and lightly drive thy frowns away.'

359. madde. The rest of the line points to some word opposed in meaning to marre. G. reads marred oper madde, which seems more probable.

myþe. Cf. Böddeker 183. 58 f.:

my murþe is al wiþ mornynge meind, ne may ich myþen hit namore.

Also 173. 24 : 'feir biheste makeþ mony mon al is serewes mythe.'

373 f. The sense is : ' You have been the cause of both my bliss and my bale ; wherefore my grief was the greater for the sudden passing of bliss so great.'

382. marereȝ mysse. 'A botcher's blunder'? that is, I am worth no more than a botcher's blunder, good for nothing. But this is a bit forced. Holthausen and a reviewer in Ath. 1891. 184 suggest manereȝ mysse, i. e., 'I lack manners,' but N. E. D. shows that 'manners' was not employed in this sense till much later.

With the line cf. 905 ; Pur. 747, 736 : 'I . . . þat mul am & askeȝ.'

384. þise. The subject is also reiterated by a pron. at 41, 290, 414, 454, 506, 686, 742, 922, 928, 939.

386. mornyf mate. For other instances of the double adj. see 190 n.

388. hente harmeȝ. The same phrase occurs at Wm. of Palerne 2786 ; Sege of Melayne 1039. In Pur. 151 it is 'scape hent.'

389. presente. One would expect presens, as in Pur. 8, 1496; this rare use may be due to requirements of rime, or to O. F. en present. Cf. F. J. Amours, Scott. Allit. Poems, Gol. and Gaw. 1287 n. (p. 285).

390 f. Cf. Bocc. 158 ff.:

Sed tu, si mereor, resera, quibus, obsecro, lustris
Te tenuit tam longa dies?

395. Supply hit is; cf. 83 n.

397. now. That is, 'now that you have humbled yourself.'

398. lufsum of lyth and lere. See variations of this phrase at Susan 275; Gol. and Gaw. 1253.

405. in hys place. 'Ad locum nominis Domini exercituum, montem Sion' (Is. 18. 7). Cf. 137, 142, 868, 973 ff. The phrase seems to anticipate 678, 679 and the allusion to Ps. 24. 3.

407. þe Lamb. This epithet, except where it renders Biblical passages, occurs in closest connection with the scriptural allegory of Christ the lover and husband; cf. 413, 741, 846, 861, 967, 1127, and esp. 795, 796. With stanza 35 read 675 n.

416. lenghe of daye3. Biblical; 'in longitudinem dierum,' Ps. 22. 6; 92. 5 (Vulg.). So Pur. 1594: 'Ever laste þy lyf in lenþe of dayes.'

419. Christ is the 'prynce of parage noble' in Pur. 167.

421. may þys be trewe. The inverted order forms a protasis without if. Cf. 287, 325, 327, 1189.

422. if, etc. 'If the question I am about to ask be foolish and wrong.'

424. þat. Personal obj. of do.

425. þat grace of grewe. Prep. postpositive; cf. 146 n. Perhaps Christ is meant as the personification of saving grace. It is, however, a point in Roman Catholic doctrine that the Virgin, as well as the Godhead, is a source of grace. Cf. 436, and Salzer, op. cit. infra, pp. 566-8.

429 ff. See p. xxi for the possible relation of these lines to Chaucer. The phœnix was a not uncommon mediæval symbol of the birth of Christ, and of the resurrection of Christ and of man. More rarely, in reference to the incarnation Mary was called phœnix. See Salzer, Sinnbilder und Beirworte Mariens 60-63; 545. More rarely still is the phœnix a type of her singular beauty and sweetness, as here. Salzer cites fewer than six examples, none of which resembles these lines so closely as does Chaucer. The nearest is from Milchsack, Hymni et Sequentiae (1886) no. 21. 180: 'Hæc est fenix unica, capillos cuius auri color et verticem miratur olor.' In an O. F. lyric (Herr. Arch. 42. 281) she is 'la gloriouse fenix, Meire et fille a dous pellant.' Raynouard, Lexique Rom. s. v. fenix, cites from the Provençal poet Bistors an instance in which a lady is addressed as 'bels fenics.' In the Roman de la Rose 9437 (ed. Michel) is mentioned the prodefame, who is rarer than the phœnix.

431. fleȝe. Really an imperfect — 'was wont to fly' — meaning little more than 'watz.'

435. Similar combinations are frequent; cf. 'Maiden, moder makeles,' Jacoby, Vier M. E. Geistl. Gedichte, l. 49 of song from Arundel MS. 248; also Prayer to Our Lady (E. E. T. S. 49, p. 192, l. 1); Five Joys of the Virgin (ib. p. 88, l. 41).

436. Cf. Herr. Arch. 42. 268, where the Virgin is Fluns de pitiet et de dousour fontaigne,

La douce pucelle de tous biens plainne.

439. The figure is not expressive, but affords interlocked alliteration. Cf. 573.

441. Emprise. One of the commonest mediæval epithets of the Virgin; see list in Salzer, Sinnbilder und Berworte Martens 456–458. Cf. Herr. Arch. 42. 250, where, in an O. F. lyric, the Virgin is 'La Saintime empereris'; also ib. 42. 244.

446. property. Cf. p. liii.

450. Cf. 83 n.

451. þo fyue. On the cardinal as a multiplicative in M. E., but without the article, cf. Zupitza in Herr. Archiv. 84. 329; perhaps þo should be þe, instr., as with a comparative; or þo fyue may = 'five of those.' Cf. 849.

458–466. Cf. throughout with 1 Cor. 6. 15; 12. 12–17.

459. naule. G., regardless of phonology, sense, or poetic delicacy, renders 'navel' (O. E. nafola). Cf. Knigge, pp. 32 ff.

460, 462. tyste, myste. Probably for tyȝte, mȝȝte, but thus spelled for the sake of rime. So at King Horn 10; cf. doster, K. H. 249, and Hall's exhaustive note p. 111 of his edition. 'Maister of myght' occurs in Gol. and Gaw. 187, but not of God.

465 ff. As the head is not jealous of the honor which the arm or hand derives from the ring, so we do not begrudge each other the rank of king and queen.

466. byȝe. Cf. the 'byȝe of bryȝt golde abowte þyn nekke' in Pur. 1638.

469. 'I leue cortayse & charyte be grete among you.'

cortayse. Trisyllabic, and perhaps a mistake for cortaysye, as at 480; cf. 481.

472-487; 588-599. On the correspondence between the thought of these passages and Bradwardine's De Causa Dei, see C. F. Brown, pp. 134-6.

476. 'Who has endured (trial) in a violent world,' or perhaps 'who has continued strong in this world.' N. E. D. prefers former, but cf. s. v. endure II. 2. Cf. 776.

Here and at subsequent points are implied animadversions on the selfish and narrow piety not uncommon in the poet's time.

477. lyues longe. So dayeȝ longe, 533. In these expressions longe is an adv., but, being construed by the speaker as a noun, it requires a partitive gen. lyueȝ, dayeȝ, etc. See N. E. D. s. v. long, adv., 6.

485. Pater ne Crede. From Bede's time down the English clergy were instructed to see that the people, particularly the children, should know at least the Pater Noster and the Creed. Thus it is enjoined in 734, by Bede's letter to Egbert (Haddan and Stubbs, Councils and Eccles. Documents 3. 316); in 747, by the Council of Clovesho, ib. 366; in 787, by a legatine report to Adrian I, ib. 448; and by Cnut, Ancient Laws and Institutes of England, ed. Thorpe 1. 373. King Edgar (ib. 2. 248) commands 'hæt ālc cristen man his bearn to cristendōme geornlice wænige · & him Pater Noster & Credon tæce.' So Ælfric, ib. 2. 351; cf. 2. 419; in 1220 it is so ordered in the diocese of Durham (Wilkins, Concilia Britanniae 1. 573); in 1257, at Norwich (ib. 1. 732); in 1295, at Winchester (C. F. Brown, Chaucer's 'Litel Clergeon', Mod. Philology 3. 474); in 1364 at Ely (Wilkins, op. cit. 3. 59): 'Provideant etiam attentius ecclesiarum rectores et sacerdotes parochiales, ut pueri parochiarum suarum diligenter doceantur, et sciant Orationem Dominicam, et Symbolum, et Salutationem Beatae Mariæ Virginis, et crucis signaculo se recte consignare.'

492. to dere a date. This phrase may be slightly colloquial, like 'Time is too precious,' meaning 'Impossible!' Cf. 504 and p. xx.

497. messe. Cf. Pat. 9. Matt. 20. 1-16 is the gospel for Septuagesima Sunday, but the fact is insignificant here, the word messe being used for rime and alliteration.

497 ff. The picturesque and dramatic quality of this paraphrase is evident in contrast with one of the same Biblical passage in Böddeker, G. L. 2. Cf. p. xviii; vii, n. 1.

499. in sample. Matt. 20. 1-16. G. prefers in-sample, but in this text the spelling en- is preferred in all such cases, and the scribe, who often writes a proclitic and the ensuing word as one, separates these.

he. To Matthew are ascribed the words of Christ; so Piers Plowm. B. 10. 455: 'Mathew hath igauntet, "Amen dico vobis,"' etc. But in 501 he changes its antecedent to Christ.

503. terme. Literally the word signifies merely 'limit' — in this case, 'end.' zere is evidently thought of as ending immediately after the grape-harvest, in mid-autumn. In the M. E. version of Palladius, On Husbandrie (1420?), the 'putacoun autumnal' of vine and tree is recommended 'ther nys noo colde' (ed. Lodge, E. E. T. S., Nov., ll. 50, 51).

505. þys hyne. G. alters to hys hyne, since 'no hyne have been referred to previously'; neither, it may be objected, are the hyne yet 'hys.' Kölbing suggests that hyne is sg., meaning the lord himself in the sense of 'Bauer, Gutsbesitzer.' But hyne designates the laborers at 632, and the poet, with his sense of social distinctions (p. liii), would not speak confusedly in matters of this kind. Both overlook the fact that kraue is present. The line seems to be a general observation, addressed to the reader, anticipatory of the men's offering themselves for hire: 'These hirelings (as a class) know well that season of year (vintage),' and when to present themselves for hire.

533. daye<sup>3</sup> longe. Cf. 477 n.

534. 'Their hire was nowhere ready'; 'their service was nowhere engaged.'

544. repreny. Cf. 315 n.

546. inlyche. For ch we should expect Northern k, as in lyk, 432, 501, 735, 874. Cf. irliche, 603, in rime.

547. lowe. Not in S. Matthew at this point, and no doubt in allusion to the signification of the parable, as implied in v. 16, or in the rest of the chapter, especially vv. 26, 27.

565. lawely. Matt. 20. 15: 'Aut non licet mihi quod volo facere?' Though lawely is commonly an adverb, it is an adj. at Prov. of Alfred 77: 'mid lawelyche deden.'

567. Kölbing's elaborate rearrangement (Eng. Stud. 16. 271) seems unnecessary.

568. byswyke<sub>3</sub>. The only instance in all the poems in this MS. of the Northern pres. 1 sg. in -es (Schwahn 6). Used here for rime.

573. pyke<sub>3</sub>. Cf. 439; and Böddeker 103. 24, 25; 137. 55, which indicate 'carry off (plunder)' as the meaning.

575. atslyke<sub>3</sub>. Construction requires subj.; cf. wore, 574. Ind. is a concession to rime.

578. lyue<sub>3</sub> blom. Cf. 1146.

581. wheþer. Not to be rendered 'whether.'

581 ff. Augustine's interpretation (Patr. Lat. 38. 531 ff.) is an inversion of this: 'Tanquam enim prima hora vocantur, qui recentes ab utero matris incipiunt esse christiani; quasi tertia, pueri' etc. Cf. Rabanus Maurus, Patr. Lat. 107. 1027 f. Augustine also interprets the various hours as the respective dates of Abel, Noah, Abraham, etc., who, though called at different times of the world, yet receive the one reward of resurrection and eternal life.

591-612. Cf. Wm. of Nassington, E. E. T. S. 26. 410-421.

593. verce. Ps. 61. 12, 13: 'Semel locutus est Deus, duo hæc audivi, quia potestas Dei est. Et tibi, Domine, misericordia, quia tu reddes unicuique juxta opera sua.'

596. 'Pretermynable suggests a definite acquaintance with the prædeterminatio of the schoolmen (cf. Thos. Aquinas, Summa Theologica, Pars I, Q. xxiii, Art. 1, ed. 1756, vol. xx, p. 146)' (Brown, 132 n.). But the word's occurrence here may be explained by Albertus' comment on Ps. 61. 12, 13: '“ Semel . . . ” Hic secundum, in quo ostendit, quod acquiesendum exhortationi: ultio nolentium acquiescere, et remuneratio acquiescentium certissime cognita: unde tanguntur tria. Primo, divinæ voluntatis ordinatio æterna et perfecta,’ etc. He cites John 1. 1 — ‘ “ In principio erat Verbum " in quo totum completissime est dispositum ' (Opera, ed. Borgnet, 16. 100).

597-600. Asyntactic ; see 168 n., and p. lv. The meaning is : ' If thou come to payment ahead of him who worked steadily all day long, then the one who has done less work is more able to receive pay, and the further (lenger) you carry the matter logically, the more surely it will prove that the less work a man does the bigger his pay ' — a reductio ad absurdum.

600-743. ' These lines are the real climax of the poem ' (Brown, p. 131). But cf. pp. lvi f. on its structure.

604. ' Whether in any case the fixed reward be small or large in proportion to the service of the recipient.'

605. Brown, p. 142, cites Richard Rolle, Of Grace, ed. Horstmann, 1. 306 ; the same, ib. 1. 133 : ' God is na chynche of his grace ; for he haues ynogh þerofe ; for, þoſe he dele it neuer so ferre, ne to so mony : he haues neuer þe lesse : for him wantes nocht bot clene vessels : til do his grace inne.'

607. laueȝ. The idea of abundance is implied in its use at Pur. 366. On the double simile see 76 n.

608. charde. Cf., for the derived meaning ' cease,' Gen. and Ex. 3055 : ' Moyses do this weder charen.'

609 f. More disputed than any other passage in the poem. The difficulty, in the last analysis, lies (1) in the antecedent of hys, whether (a) God, or (b) the man ; (2) in the interpretation of dard, whether (a) ' fear,' or (b) ' hide' ; (3) in the antecedent of hym, whether (a) God, or (b) the man. G., taking 1 b, 2 a, and 3 a, renders : ' That man's franchise is large who ever stood in fear of Him who maketh rescue in sin.' M. (Acad. 39. 602) objects to this interpretation of dard to, since the regular prep. w. dare, ' fear,' is at (cf. 839). Taking 1 a, 2 b, 3 b, he renders : ' His (God's) liberality, which has ever been unsearchable, abounds to all. To the man who makes amendment for sin (or repents) no blessing shall be denied.' Fick, taking the same and putting a semicolon after large, renders : ' His (God's) franchise is large ; to him who confided himself to (hid himself in) him that makes rescue in sin,' etc. ; Kölbing (Eng. Stud. 16. 271) seconds this interpretation. But G.'s rendering is to be preferred. First, as to (3) the antecedent of hym is God. The phrase matȝ rescoghe in the alliterative poems is military in connotation, meaning 'succor with reinforcements'; cf. Destr. Troy 9734; Alex. 2813, 5162, 5202; Morte Arth. 433, 4132, 4138, 4230; Buke of the Howlat 433. M.'s interpretation is therefore inadmissible. Secondly, as to (1), hys refers to a different antecedent from that of hym; hys fraunchyse, etc., means 'that man's freedom, privilege, immunity is large who,' etc., cf. N. E. D., s. v. franchise. Finally, as to (2), though at is the usual prep., G. suggests that to may have seemed more appropriate where the sense is 'continue in fear before the Lord' (Acad. 40. 36). But it is quite possible that dard is an error for fard (fared), in alliteration w. fraunchyse, the sense being: 'That man's privilege is large who (in temptation) ever resorted to him that giveth succor in sin.'

610. rescoghe. Usually rescōwe, but between the two spellings there could have been little difference of pronunciation. Cf. spellings and rimes in 634, 636.

611. hem. G. alters to hym, but sudden change of number, where the antecedent is indefinite, occurs at 331, 621, 626, 687.

626. The author's sense of the importance of baptism appears in Pur. 163-4:

For alle arn laþed luflyly, be luþer & þe better, þat euer wern fulȝed in font þat fest to haue.

þay. For other abrupt changes of number see 611 and n.

by lyne. M. glosses 'lineage'; G. renders 'forthwith'; it is rather 'by rule and line,' i. e. 'in regular order'; cf. Ayenb. 160: 'doþ al be riȝtuolnesse and be lingne.'

628. boroȝt. Cf. 11 n.

629. endente. For endented, to rime; cf. 591 n., 629 f. 'Anon the day, indented with darkness, doth yield to the power of death.'

630. myȝt . . . to. See 146 n. Kölbing's conjecture improves the passage, but is unnecessary to its sense.

632. hyne. Antec. of þat, 631; awkward but characteristic.

635. at þe fyrist fyne. Cf. Benedict XII as cited at 675 n.

ȝyrd (G.) is phonologically impossible; the MS. reads neither ȝyrd nor ȝyld (M.). The word has apparently been altered by the scribe, but I am at a loss for the intended reading.

639–645. Cf. Erk. 294–298 :

Dwynande in þe derke dethes, þat dyȝt vs oure fader,
Adam, oure alder, þat ete of þat appulle
þat mony a plyȝtles pepul has poysned for euer ;
Bot, mendyd wt a medecyne, ȝe are made for to lyuye.

Cf. Rich. Rolle, ed. Horstmann, 1. 87: ‘þou bete al my bale with bote of þi blood.’

647. plyt. For plyȝt. See 309 n.

650. Transverse alliteration; so 306, 956.

652. ‘Pars illorum erit in stagno ardenti igne et sulphure ; quod est mors secunda’ (Apoc. 21. 8).

653. þe water is baptēm. See John 19. 34. For the symbolism cf. Anselm, Epistolæ 4. 107, Patr. Lat. 159. 255 :
‘Aqua cum vino in sacramento ideo apponitur, ut aqua quæ cum sanguine de latere Christi fluxit representaretur, quæ aqua significat baptismum, in quo populus per effusionem sanguinis innovatur.’ Cf.
also Wm. of Nassington, E. E. T. S. 26. 277 ff., where from Christ’s wound

owt rane to oure saluacyone
The precyous blode of oure raunsone,
With þe water of baptym clere and thyn.

And Rich. Rolle, ed. Horstmann, 2. 361 : ‘And of þat ilke welle of lyf (cf. 649), þorw þat grisly wounde, runne two floodes : þi riche precious blod, . . . and þat deore holy water (cf. 647) þat al þis world wosch of sake and of synne.’ An early instance is Cyprian, De Hæret. Bapt., Patr. Lat. 3. 1248 ; cf. Tertullian, De Bapt. adv. Quintillam, Patr. Lat. 1. 1319. Augustine lays little stress upon the idea ; see Contra Donatistas 21, Patr. Lat. 43. 440.

654. grounde. Common epithet of weapons in the allitera-tive poems. Cf. Morte Arth. 1281, 4167 ; Sege Þer. 553.

656. Another case of the poet’s asyntactic style (cf. 434 ; 630, 631 ; 773–780 ; 1020 ; 1022–1028), and may be rendered, ‘the offense which Adam [by bringing upon us], drowned us in death.’
See 1 Cor. 15. 22.

657. The statement is elliptical : ‘Now is there no obstacle between us and bliss that he has not withdrawn, and no means of approach that he has not restored.’

660 ff. The doctrine of this passage may be briefly summarized thus : Salvation is granted both to the innocent and the contrite. The innocent ever possess it as their right ; the contrite obtain it only through repentance, the pain of remorse, and the grace and mercy of God. It is better, if one can, to win salvation by innocence, than to run the risk of failure and the danger of judgment which the other course involves. But, if one is brought to judgment, let him urge in his defense the words of Solomon and David.

664. Rel. pron. omitted ; cf. 732 n.

665. resoun. The personified Resoun in Piers Pl. 4 is distinguished for his justice ; cf. esp. 117–131. Cf. Rich. Rolle, ed. Horstmann, 1. 339 : ‘Resoun, he whiche knoweþ good & wykke.’

672. at. Demonstrative? At is a Northern form of the rel. pat (cf. 536), and of the conjunction (Alex. 100, 266, 1480, 2445). The emphasis in the present case would call for pat, and at may be a scribe’s error. G.’s reading at inoscence, ‘in innocence,’ is forced ; by is the prep. elsewhere (cf. 708) ; the refrain would tend to enforce uniformity.

675. se hys face. That is, enjoy the Beatific Vision, to which our poet often alludes ; cf. Pur. 28, 176, 178, 552, 576, 595, 1055, 1112, 1804–1812 ; Pat. 24. The doctrine is based upon 1 John 3. 2 ; 1 Cor. 13. 12 (cf. Matt. 5. 8 ; Rev. 22. 4). It is considered by Augustine in De Civ. Dei 22. 29, and more fully in an epistle De Videndo Deo, Patr. Lat. 33. 596 ff. ; it was finally formulated in 1336, by Benedict XII. I quote his words, since they relate to the theological questions in the Pearl, and to the maiden’s condition as one of the innocent (cf. 626 and n.): ‘... . quod secundum communem Dei ordinationem, animæ sanctorum omnium, qui de hoc mundo ante Domini nostri Jesu Christi passionem decesserunt, necnon sanctorum apostolorum, martyrum, confessorum, virginum, ut aliorum fidelium defunctorum, post sacramentum baptismi ab eis susceptum, in quibus nihil purgabile fuit quando decesserunt, nec erit quando decedent etiam in futurum, vel si tunc erit aliquid purgabile in eisdem, tamen post mortem suam purgabunt, atque animæ puerorum eodem Christi baptismate renatorum, & baptizandorum, cum fuerint baptizati, ante usum liberi arbitrii decendentium, mox post mortem suam & purgationem præfatam in illis qui purgatione hujusmodi indigebant, etiam ante resumptionem suorum corporum & judicium generale, post ascensio-nem Domini nostri Jesu Christi in cælum, fuerunt, sunt, & erunt in cælo, cælorumque regno, & paradiſo cælesti, cum Christo, sanc-torum angelorum consortio aggregatæ, ac post Christi Jesu passionem & mortem viderunt & vident & videbunt Divinam essentiam imme-diate, se bene & clare & aperte illis ostendentem ; quodque sic vi-dentes, eadem Divina essentia perfruuntur : necnon quod tali visione & fruitione, eorum animæ qui jam decesserant, sunt vere beatæ, & habent vitam æternam & requiem.' — Benedict XII, Epistola I, in Mansi, Sacrorum Conciliorum Nova et Amplissima Collectio 25. 986 ; cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa 3. 92 ; Migne, Theologiae Cursus Completus 7. 158 ff.; also ll. 411 ff.; 625 ff.; 760 ff.

681–683. Ps. 23 (Vulg.). 4, with an allusion in 683 to Ps. 25 (Vulg.). 12, and the addition, in 686–688 of Ps. 14 (Vulg.). 1–3, though vv. 687, 688 return to 23. 4 (Vulg.), 'qui non accepit in vano animam suam, nec juravit in dolo proximo suo.'

689–694. sa3 Salomon. In Liber Sapientiae 10. 10 (as shown by H. Bradley, Acad. 38. 201) : 'Hæc [Sapientia] pro-fugum iræ fratris justum [Jacob] deduxit per vias rectas, et ostendit regnum Dei, et dedit illi scientiam sanctorum : honestavit illum in laboribus, et complevit labores illius.' These words allude to Gen. 28. 12–15, adapted in 693 f., where Jacob had the vision of heaven, and the promise : 'Terram, in qua dormis, tibi dabo et semini tuo. . . . Reducam te in terram hanc.' But the present use is explained by the commentary of Rabanus on Sap. 10. 10 (Patr. Lat. 109. 717, 718) : 'Juxta allegoriam ad sanctos martyres pertinet, quos divina sapientia, Christus videlicet, . . . sua misericordia, a cunctis hostium persecutionibus liberavit, et ab insidiis eorum incontaminatos protexit ; . . . spe futuræ mercedis, tandemque . . . victores felicissimos ad regnum æternum perduxit.' With 693 cf. Gen. 13. 14, 15.

690. [kyng hym.] Indicated by the alliteration. As G. says, Wisdom in the quotation from Solomon is identified by me-diaeval commentators with Christ. He cites Augustine, De Trin. 4. 20. Cf. also Rabanus as cited in 689 n.

aquyle. Referring to God's reception of the fugitive Jacob.

693. yle. Not necessarily 'isle,' as G. renders. M. E. yle more often means 'island,' yet the meaning 'remote province or land' is common ; in Destr. Troy 101 Thessaly is an yle (translating regnum) ; in Alex. 1039, Italy ; ib. 2116, Phrygia ; at 2800 the provinces of India are thus designated, as are those of Italy and Egypt at 5110; ‘in O. T., after the equivalent Heb., applied to lands beyond the sea’ (N. E. D. s. v. isle I. b.).

697-708. Cf. Wm. of Nassington’s picture of the last judgment, E. E. T. S. 26. 403 ff.:

Certes I ne wate whate I may say þan,
Bot alls Dauid did, þe haly man —
‘Do þou, Lorde, with þi seruande,
Eftyre þi mercy, þat es ay sauande ;
And intill dome come þou noghte
With þi seruande þat þou has boghte ;
ffor I hafe hade grete drede in thoghte
Of þi domes, and þat drede leffe I noghte ;
ffor þou, Lorde arte reghewysse domes-mane,
That all thyng regheteuissly dem kane.’

699. Ps. 142 (Vulg.). 2.

703. innome. O. E. genomen. Cf. inlyche (O. E. gelice), innoghe (genog), in seme, in melle.

709. The defective metre indicates some omission. Kölbing suggests arede for rede; but cf. p. xlili, n.

711-726. It is evident that this passage is based upon the poet’s recollection of at least two of the gospels. The word ‘touch,’ 714, points to Mk. 10. 13, or Lk. 18. 15, rather than to Matt. 19. 13, and Christ’s words in 722 ff. occur in Mark and Luke immediately after the blessing of the children, as here, but are in a different place in Matt. (18. 2). On the other hand, the mildness of 717 is more consistent with Matthew’s account, and 721 seems reminiscent of Matt. 18. 2. The passage is only one of several that show that the poet adapted Scriptural material rather from memory than from the open page.

721 ff. Reverts to Matt. 18. 1-3. Mylde is the ‘little child’ of v. 2: ‘Advocans Jesus parvulum.’ But mylde may == the disciples, 721 rendering ‘vocavit duodecim,’ from Mk. 9. 34 (Vulg.), a passage similar to Matt. 18. 1-3. Kölbing objects that the disciples are not mylde here, but the epithet is conventional; the Amazons at Destr. Troy 10847 are ‘maidons full mild, mightily in armys, . . . þrepand in wer’ (cf. 10972).

726. mote oper mascle. Cf. 843.

sulpande. This obscure word is a favorite with the poet ; cf. ‘synful & sulped,’ Pur. 15 ; ‘sulped in synne,’ 550 ; ‘þe vycios fylþe þat bysulpeȝ manneȝ saule,’ 575 ; also 1130, 1135 ; Alex. 4292.

732. M.’s reading is unnecessary. The rel. pron. is omitted also in 664, 734, 925, 1056.

734. fore. With rel. pron. þat understood ; see 732 n.

735–743. The poet’s interpretation of the pearl of great price (Matt. 13. 45, 46) is somewhat confused. It may have been prompted chiefly by Albertus, Compendium Theolog. Veritatis 2. 4, Opera, ed. Borgnet, 34. 42 : ‘Cœlum est corpus purum . . . essentia subtilissimum, incorruptibilitate solidissimum, . . . quietate perspicuum, materia purissimum, figura sphæricum . . . Beatorum spiritum habitaculum.’ Yet it seems to reflect faintly some of the mediaeval comments on this passage in Matthew. Augustine says the pearl represents Christ, or the love of one’s neighbor, or the supreme knowledge of the Word, which resembles a pearl in being ‘purus et solidus et nusquam a se dissonans’ (cf. 1. 738) ; or finally it signifies ourselves, whom we reclaim by giving all things else in exchange (Quæst. 17 in Matt., Migne, Patr. Lat. 35. 1371). In Jerome (Comm. in Matt. 2. 13. 45, Patr. Lat. 27. 98) it is knowledge of the Saviour, the sacrament of his passion, and the mystery of the resurrection. In Gregory it is the sweetness of the heavenly kingdom (Hom. in Evangelia 11. 2). Cf. Thomas Aquinas, Catena Aurea, tr. 1874, 2. 513. See Introd. p. xxxi. For their bearing upon this passage in the Introduction I add the following interpretations of the pearl : Christ, or the preaching of the Gospel, Chrysostom, Hom. 23, on Matt. 7. 6, and Hom. 4. 7, on Matt. 13. 45 ; the eternal life, Petrus Chrysologus, Patr. Lat. 184. 1069 ; the Virgin (as frequently), Bernard, Patr. Lat. 184. 1069 ; in a homily attributed to him (Patr. Lat. 184. 1131) it is ‘religio sancta, pura, et immaculata’ ; in Rupert of Deutz (Patr. Lat. 169. 1202) the pearls of the heavenly gates (Rev. 21. 21) are the saints adorning the church ; Hugo of St. Victor (Patr. Lat. 176. 1159) says each gate is one pearl, ‘quoniam per unitatem fidei et puritatem’ the just enter heaven ; at 1163, citing Matt. 13. 46 and Gregory, he says, ‘Margarita vero mystice significat evangelicam doctrinam seu dulcetudinem cœlestis vitæ' ; Albertus Magnus says it typifies those who enter into faith in the whiteness of all virtues, or are distinguished by one, 'ut Abraham a fide, Lot ab hospitalitate,' etc. (Comm. in Apoc. 21. 21, Opera, ed. Borgnet, 38. 778) ; Bonaventura says the pearl is the crown of every saint in heaven (cited 1186 n.). In Gregory of Nazianzen the Trinity is a pearl (Patr. Græc. 36. 304) ; Ephrem the Syrian perceives in the pearl 'mysteries pertaining to the kingdom—in its brightness, Christ ; in its pureness, his body ; in its undividedness, the Truth' (Select Works, ed. Morris, p. 84 ; cf. Albert S. Cook, Mod. Lang. Notes 20 118) ; again Ephrem, in a hymn on the death of children (Select Hymns and Homilies, tr. H. Burgess, p. 14), says : 'Like pearls in diadems children are inserted in the kingdom.' Cf. 2 n., and 1211 and n. From this list may be found in general the sources of the interpretations in Usk's Testament of Love, viz., the church visible (2. 12) ; or, as a woman's name (Margaret), the pearl signifies grace, learning, or wisdom concerning God. This treatise is, of course, later than our poem.

738. rounde. Cf. 5 and n.

743 f. See p. li.

747-768. Cf. Bocc. 59 ff.

Silvius.                    Dic munere cuius
Inter texta auro vestis tibi candida flavo ?
Que tibi lux oculis olim non visa refulget ?

Olympia. Has vestes formamque dedit faciemque coruscam Parthenos, secumque fui.

Parthenos is the Virgin Mary.

748. Cf. the description of Reason, Rom. Rose 3007 ff. :

A son semblant et à son vis
Pert que fu faite en paradis,
Car Nature ne séust pas
Ovre faire de tel compas.

Reminiscence in Chaucer, Duchess 1195 ff. : 'Nature Ne formed neuer in creature So moche beaute.' See further, Watriquet, Li Mireoirs as Dames 59 ff. ; Dit de la Feste du Conte de Flandre 250 ;
Guill. de Machault, ed. Tarbé, 14 ; Froissart, Paradys d'Amour
240 ; Destruy Troy 4010.

750. Pymalyon. He fashioned and painted a woman's image of such passing beauty that he fell in love with it. The story is told in Rom. Rose 21802–22210 after Ovid, Met. 10. 243ff. But the comparison as made here is common in poets of the time. See Guill. de Machault, ed. Tarbé, 60, 61; 133; Froissart, L'Espinette Amoureuse, l. 1796; Paradys d'Amours, l. 1123; Deschamps, ed. Raynaud (Soc. des Anc. Textes Franc.) 3. 266; 6. 107; 10. liv.

751. Arystotel. To select an example of the greatest learning. letterure. M., G., and N. E. D. define as 'knowledge' or 'book-learning.' 'Writings, books' seems more appropriate. Cf. Alex. 2170, where the poet, mentioning a certain plain, refers to the source of his poem, Historia de Proeliis Alexandri, saying: 'Luctus it hiȝt, þe letterure & þe line þus it callis.'

752. carpe. For carped? But cf. pret. hope.

753. Cf. 195 and n.

754. angel-hauyng. Cf. Destr. Troy 265: 'Your angel-mouthis most melifluate'; Dunbar, ed. Laing, 1. 22: 'Hir sweet Having and Fresche Bewte.' For omission of is see 83 n.

755. offys. The second f in the MS. is spread, whence M. and G.'s mistaken readings.

760. semed. There is no compelling reason, as G. seems to think, against the meaning 'was fitting,' especially in view of the poet's objections, in the discussion just ended, to the maiden's present state. Cf. 411 ff., and 675 n.

763 f. Holthausen has pointed out the unmistakable source of these lines in the Song of Songs 4. 7, 8:

Tota pulchra es, amica tua, et macula non est in te.

Veni de Libano, sponsa mea, veni de Libano, veni, coronaberis.

With the last word compare 767. The text may have been suggested by Boccaccio's Eclogue. Olympia tells how she was received in heaven by Boccaccio's father (238 f.):

Venisti, o nostri soboles carissima silvi?

De Libano nunc sponsa veni sacrosque hymeneos

Cantemus.

But the poet probably knew also Dante's use of the text at Purg. 30. 11, where the four and twenty elders sing 'Veni de Libano' before the chariot in the mystic procession, and the song may be taken as addressed to Beatrice (cf. Scartazzini, Encilopedia Dantesca 2100, s. v. veni). Christ receives the Virgin with the same anthem at the Assumption (Legenda Aurea, ed. Graesse 507). See p. xvi.

766. on dese. 'In a place of honor.' The association of the poet's mind is, of course, with the place of honor at the feast in hall. Thus Guinevere is 'dressed on he dere des,' Gaw. 75; cf. the parable in Pur. 115 where the 'bryȝtest atyred' sit 'at he hyȝe dese, þat dubbed wer fayrest.' Cf. also Destr. Troy 385, 2452, 3399; Alex. 4215, 4695; Rauf Coil. 189. See Rev. 7. 13, 14.

769. byrd. The poet doubtless intends a pun. The context points unmistakably to the meaning 'bride,' but flambe (see 90) shows also that he is thinking of 'bird.' Cf. 429 and n.

772. vyf. For pronunciation cf. alliteration. The spelling is Northern; see p. xiii, n. 1.

775. onvunder cambe. So 'anvnder bis,' Böddeker 157. 58; 'brihest vnder bys,' 150. 38; cf. ib. glossary, s. v. vnder, p. 432; Dunbar, Gladethe thouse Queyne, Works, ed. Small, 2. 274; 'most reverent under croune.'

780. Copula om.

785. þe Lambes vyues. The 144,000 (not 140,000; cf. 870 where the correct number is given) are thus described in Rev. 14. 4: 'Hi sunt, qui cum mulieribus non sunt coquinati, virgines enim sunt.' But it is more in harmony with the poet's artistic purpose to represent them as maidens.

On vyues, see 772 n.

maiden
wigins

786. flot. Apparently the numeral is to be taken as adj. modifying flot, unless we should read in flot. See Rev. 14. 1, 3, 4.

788. knot. Usually of a smaller band than here.

790-792. See Rev. 19. 7, 8; 21. 2.

801-807. See Is. 53.

802. lande. Fick, Kölbing, and Holthausen destroy the alliteration. No change is necessary; in lande may mean the smooth piece of ground where the shearing takes place (saltus, in Promptorium).

nem. Rime demands this change of MS. men. Nem, pret. 3 sg. of nymme, occurs also at Pur. 505. Yet Fick and Kölbing would retain men, 'maim,' O. F. mahaigner.

805 ff. The language of this stanza is that of many ecstatic mediæval meditations upon the Passion. Cf. Rich. Rolle, ed. Horstmann, I. 84, 85; 359; Wm. of Nassington, E. E. T. S. 26. 200–236.

808. care colde. Cf. 50 and n.

813 f. flyȝe & folde & brede. Flyȝe with the scourge, and afterwards with the red robe, which tore off with itself the skin from his lacerated body, as described in the citations above from Wm. of Nassington and Rolle. Folde, of his swooning under the crushing weight of the cross; for fold in this sense see Wynn. and Wast. 35; E. E. T. S. 26. 81. 56. Brede, as in Rich. Rolle I. 86: ‘þei drow and streynyd þe streyȝe on brede, and on lenkthe by handys and by feet.’ Though active in form, these three infinitives with lette are equivalent to passive.

817. Galalye. þer as of 818 must refer to Jordan; there is no account of John’s having preached or baptized elsewhere than in the region of Jordan. Cf. Matt. 3. 13; Mk. 1. 14. But Herod, who imprisoned and beheaded him, was tetrarch of Galilee. See Luke 3. 1–22.

824. G. renders, ‘that all upon this world have wrought,’ but hatȝ is never pl. in the poem. vpon seems to belong w. þat, as elsewhere; see 146 n. The sense then is, ‘the sins upon which all the world hath wrought,’ with reference to the accumulation or amassing of the burden throughout the ages. This is somewhat awkward, but it may have been rime, not sense, which determined the addition of vpon.

826. clem. M. derives from O. E. clāman, ‘smear,’ i. e. ‘lay on’; cf. Is. 53. 2. G. renders ‘claim’; the usual form is clayme (Gaw. 293; Alex. 1848; clame, 2108), but G. cites an instance of clemē in rime, and may be right in saying that clem is an ‘eye-rime.’ Such alteration of spelling for rime is common in the poem. But a word, rather inappropriately meaning ‘smear,’ might be used for rime’s sake. For discussion see Acad. 39. 603; 40. 36, 76, 116.

835–1126. For the use of the Bible in this passage see table of Biblical quotations.

836. syȝ. In the light of Rev. 4. 2; 5. 1, 11, and II. 788, 867, 985, 1032, syȝ, not sayȝ (MS.), nor sagh (G.) is probable.

841 f. neuer pechche of oþer huee, i. e., none at all.

843. mot ne masklle. Cf. 726.

843 ff. Cf. Erk. 85 ff. :

Als wemles were his wedes withouten any teche,
Oþer of moulynge oþer of motes oþir wroght fretene,
& as bryȝt of hor blee in blysnande hewes.

850. Cf. p. xx.

853 ff. On reasons for suspecting this whole stanza see p. xlvi, n. 1.

855. mynge. G. renders ‘mingled with any stain.’ I follow M.’s derivation < O. E. myngian, the thought being, apparently, that those newly added to the company bring no diminution of bliss, since, being innocent, they bring no reminder of the taint of sin.

856. creste. The crown of 205 ff. See 1101.

857. corses in clotte; clynge. Cf. E. E. T. S. 24. 89.
20:

Out of þis erþe into þe erþe, þere to clinge as a clot of clay.

Also 24. 85. 68; 124. xxv. 16.

860. Vague. M. (marg. paraphr.) and G. (transl.) interpret: ‘From the one death (of the body) arises our full hope of heaven. Cf. 957 ff. Two other renderings are possible: (1) ‘From the death of one (Christ) arises the hope of us all.’ This is the theme of 799–816, 824 f., and may be an allusion to Heb. 10, 14: ‘Una enim oblatione, consummatum in sempiternum sanctificatos’; cf. also 9. 26–28; 10. 10, 12; Rom. 6. 10; Pet. 3. 18. (2) Taking hope as mere expectation (cf. hope, v., in Gloss.), ‘Of one death of (the body) our expectation is “ful drest,” i. e., fulfilled, realized; . . . our care is now done away.’ If the meaning of drest seems forced, it may be due to the exigencies of rime.

862. mes. Perhaps ‘feast’ (O. F. mes); the poet loved such scenes; cf. Gaw., Fytte 1; also 876–927; 996–1019; 1648–1667; but ‘mass’ seems more likely; see 1064 n.

868. þryuen & þro. The same phrase at Böddeker 145. 23; 162. 16.

869. maydenneȝ. Cf. 785 n.

874. laden. For meaning cf. Apoc. 14. 2, ‘tamquam vocem aquarum multarum.’ flodeȝ fele laden seems to be treated by the poet as a compound, or flodeȝ is perhaps understood to be a gen. plur.

875. brouweȝ. The word gains force if we consider the poet's use of it in Pur. 220 to describe the rebellious angels leaping in rout from heaven ; and again, Pur. 504, the animals hurrying out of the ark.

torreȝ blo. Not 'pale towers,' as in M. and G. The correct meaning of blo in this case is indicated by Pur. 1017 (the Dead Sea is 'drouy & dym,' 'blo . . . & blak'; cf. Pat. 134, 138), and of torreȝ by Destr. Troy 1983 and Pur. 949 f., where in a storm

Clowdeȝ clustered bytwene kesten vp torres þat þe þik þunder þrast þirled hem ofte.

See p. xx. The line suggests such a scene in the Cumberland hills as the poet may have seen often.

876. lote. Usually, in the alliterative poems, of a loud and confused, but not unpleasant noise. Thus we have the 'loud lot of þe wyndes' in Pat. 161 ; 'þe flode lotes' 183 ; 'the lates of the foules,' Alex. 4384. It describes the noise of drums and trumpets at the feast in Gaw. 119 ; and of the hunting horns, 1917.

877. schowted scharpe. So the herald at Alex. 4729 'sett vp a sharp schoute at all þe schaw ryngis.'

879. note. Besides its musical meaning the word may carry its more general meaning, 'matter'; cf. nwe note, 155. For another pun see bryd, 769.

880. lufly dere. On the double adj. see 190 n.

884 f. Cf. Milton, Lines at a Solemn Music:

That undisturbed song of pure concert
Aye sung before the sapphire-colored throne
To him that sits thereon,
With saintly shout and solemn jubilee.

889 ff Cf. Rich. Rolle, ed. Horstmann, 2. 250 ff. :

So mykel joye & so mony are þore

þat alle þo clerkes here of lore
Kouthe not telle þo lest poynte of one.

895. hit arn. Cf. 1199 ; Pat. 38, 40, 69. The expression seems to occur in statements of a generalizing nature.

anioynt. Not 'joined,' as G. has it. ajoyn or enjoyn are common forms with the same meaning, as indicated by Erk. 216 :

'þene was I juge here enjoyned.' Other instances are Destr. Troy 128, 291, 350, 512, 2328, etc.; Alex. 1197; E. E. T. S. 117. 613. 36.

905. Cf. 382, and Rich. Rolle 1. 220: 'þou erte now vylere þane any mukke.'

among of MS. might be changed to 'amonc.' Cf. flonc (flong), 1165; pynk (pyng), 308, 496, 587; also 591 n., 1038. See Knigge, p. 69.

911. blose. M.: 'blaze, flame. Icel. blossi, a flame.' G.: 'probably O. F. blos = privé (de bon sens); . . . hence, "a churl."' Wright, Dial. Dict. gives bloss as Northern, = a buxom young woman, or, ironically, of any ugly sight. None of these explanations is satisfactory; probably rime determined the choice of the word.

913-936. Cf. Bocc. 201 ff.:

Mira refers sanctamque puto, sedemque deorum
Quam memoras silvam. Sed quis nam presidet illi?
Et comites, mea nata, refer ritusque locorum.

919. ryche. G. renders 'realm,' but such combinations of alliterating adjectives occur elsewhere: 189, 190, 260, 386. Cf. 'Jerusalem he ryche,' Pur. 1159; also Pur. 786, 812.

920. dere. The epithet, and, in fact, the whole line, are conventional. In Pur. 1794 'dere Daryous' is 'dyȝt vpon trone'; cf. 'dere Darius on dese,' Alex. 1720; 'David he dere,' Morte Arth. 3417; 'David full dere,' Parl. of the Thre Ages 448.

920 f. Kölbing suspects these bot's, since two are cacophonous.

922. note. So in Erk. 38 the new building of St. Paul's is 'a noble note.'

928. yow. I. e., meyny; cf. 384 n.

932. and. A natural reiteration, but G.'s rejection may be right.

939. þat. Demonstrative; cf. 384 n.

944. theme. teme is the correct pronunciation, and doubtless the spelling in the scribe's original; note alliteration, and teme, Pat. 37, 358; Gaw. 1541, and the fact that the common M. E. spelling is with t, not th. So throne, in alliteration with trone, tras, 1113; but trone, 835, 920, 1051, 1055.

Holthausen questions the length of this verse, and would substitute John for either pe apostel or in Apocalypce. The combination occurs at 996, 1008, 1020.

947. The implied thought seems to be ‘Ours is not an earthly flock and an earthly city, and therefore has no need of the earthly protection of fold or moat, such as you seem to expect.’ Cf. Mätzner s. v. flake.

949 ff. The sense is: ‘To speak accurately of these two cities, if both are called Jerusalem, that name merely signifies “city of God,”’ etc.

952. cete of God. No doubt alluding to Heb. 12. 22; ‘Sed accessistis ad Sion montem, et civitatem Dei viventis, Jerusalem cælestem,’ etc.; or to Apoc. 3. 12: ‘Nomen civitatis Dei mei, novæ Jerusalem.’

syȝt of pes. The usual interpretation in the Middle Ages. It occurs frequently from Origen down. See Cook’s exhaustive note on Christ 30 in his edition. M. E. examples of this interpretation are O. E. Homilies (E. E. T. S.) 1. 79; 2. 53; Rich. Rolle I. 212.

956. Cf. 650 n.

957. to. See 146 n.

962. flor. Etymology and rime would not prevent the spelling flour (cf. 426), bour, etc. for the words thus riming in this stanza; cf. wygour, 971.

973 ff. With this description of the New Jerusalem should be compared a similar one in the vision of the Red Cross Knight in Spenser, F. Q. I. 10, stanzas 55–58.

974. Cf. 196 n.

976. veued. See 772 n.

978. launceȝ. M. and G.: ‘branches.’

981. breued. Alliteration points to this reading; the word occurs at 755; Gaw. 1393, 1436, 1488, 2521; Pur. 197. The sense would then be: ‘Till I caught sight of the city and gazed upon it as I hurried along, revealed beyond the brook at some distance from me.’

991. gentyl gemmeȝ. Cf. ‘gentileste jowelle,’ Morte Arth.

862; ‘iaspe pe gentil,’ Böddeker 145. 3; E. E. T. S. 26. 88.

16. Cf. 1015; 7 n.

992. banteleȝ. This word seems to have connection with the obscure word embaned. Its meaning is perhaps indicated by a comparison of this passage with 1017, and with two others. In Pur. 1457 f. among the sacred vessels are ‘cowpes ful clene, as casteles arayed, Embaned vnder batelment with bantelleȝ quoyn.’ When Gawain, Gaw. 788 f., reaches the castle of Morgan la Fay, he gazes from the moat up its huge height,

Of harde hewen ston vp to þe tableȝ.

Embaned vnder þe abataylment, in þe best lawe.

Here, 992, we have the bantels mounted upon a base (cf. 1000), and corresponding to the twelve foundations of different stones; above these bantels rises the wall, 1017. They seem to be the steps rising in the twelve courses of the foundation up to the wall. In Pur. 1458 they are reversed, and would be called ‘corbel courses.’ The construction is seen in many mediæval walls. Cf. Plate xxvii in the Roxburghe Club edition of Mandeville’s Travels. G. interprets it ‘pillars’ (transl.), and ‘crossbeam’ (n.), deriving it from O. F. bandel.

1001. he glente grene. In its most precious form jasper is green.

1007. rybe. ‘Sextum sardius,’ Apoc. 21. 20.

1011. þe beryl cler & quyt. Cf. Pur. 554 ff.:

As þe beryl bornyst byhoueȝ be clene, þat is sounde on vche a syde & no sem habes,
Withouten maskle oþer mote as margerye perle.

1012. twynne-how. G. reads twynne-how, ‘twin-hue,’ citing Bede’s Explan. Apocalypsis, ‘“topasius . . . duos habere fertur colores.”’ But the form for hue in this text is spelled and pronounced differently from how, evidently consisting at times of two syllables: huee, 842; hwe, 896; hweȝ, 90; cf. hues (end of the line), Pur. 1483; hweȝ, 1119 (end), Gaw. 707 (end), 1738; hwe, Gaw. 147, 234. But it is difficult to construe how as the conj.

1013. tyȝt. See 309 n.

1014. jacyngħ. The form may be due to the late Latin form iacinctus, which this renders; also iacinet, Hali Meidenh. 43; iacyntis, Wyclif, Song Sol. 5. 14.

1015. gentyleste. Cf. 7 n. and 991 n.

1017. Supply watȝ after bent; cf. 83 n.

1018. o jasporye. With the extended form jasporye cf. topasye 1012; topasiune, Land of Cockayne 92.

1025 f. Perhaps these lines are independent sentences with wern and watz understood; see 83 n.

1026. glayre. Like Ezek. 8. 2: ‘Quasi aspectus splendoris, ut visio electri’; cf. 1. 27: ‘Quasi speciem electri, velut aspectum ignis’; also 1. 4.

1029. So of Babylon, Pur. 1387: ‘Uch a syde upon soyle helde seven myle.’

1030. twelue. An alteration, perhaps deliberate, of twelve thousand (stadia duodecim millia) in Apoc. 21. 16.

1031. cayre. Not cayre < O. N. keyra (M. and G.), but probably < F. quarer, carrer (see N. E. D. s. v. quare), with the vowel slightly modified for rime. This is further indicated by the context and the source in Apoc. 21. 16.

1036. pyked. Perhaps merely ‘adorned.’ But cf. Gaw. 769, ‘a pyked palays, pyned ful þik,’ and Cath. Angl. s. v. pyked. The poet may be thinking of portals adorned with pinnacle or finial, and covered with plates, probably of gold; cf. Alex. 4894: ‘þe ȝatis ware of ȝetan gold ȝarkid (furnished) of platis.’

1038. fateȝ. See 905 n.

1041. whateȝ. See p. xlvi, n. 3. This expansion, riming with dateȝ, etc., would indicate that watz, rather than wacȝ, as G. has it throughout, is the spelling intended.

1050. sotyle cler. The exact reverse of Milton’s ‘palpable obscure,’ P. L. 2. 406; cf. Scott, Lady of the Lake 3. 26: ‘No murmur waked the solemn still.’ Also Spenser, F. Q. 1. 7. 6: ‘And mightie strong was turned to feeble frail.’ See 190 n.

1059. See 111 n.

1060. galle oþer glet. N. E. D. (s. v. gall<sup>2</sup>) cites the early modern German voller galle und glesz (Grimm), ‘said of a rock full of unsound places.’

1063. mynyster. Cf. 11 n.

1064. The celebration of mass in heaven. Albertus says: ‘Hæc [eucharistia] enim erit cœna nuptiarum Agni (Apoc. 19. 9) . . . In deliciis paradisi Dei nostri sumitur corpus Domini. Ibi enim cum Patre æterno nos honorante per suum consensum ad mensam sede-mus. Ibi Filius præcinctus decore et lumine se nobis ministrat’

(De Eucharistica, Dist. 3, Tract. 4, Cap. 5, Opera, ed. Borgnet, 38. 328). Cf. l. 862.

1065. stoken. Cf. Pur. 884: 'Steken he zates ston-harde wyth stalworth barreȝ.'

1066. lone. Doubtless the lanes outside the city are meant. The sense is then 'open toward every lane,' and thus accessible from each.

1070. spotty. So the moon's 'spotty globe,' Milton, P. L. l. 291; Thomson, Autumn 1091, 'her spotted disk.'

1070 ff. The poet fully appreciated the moon's beauty; cf. 1093. The force of these lines is enhanced by considering his susceptibility to the splendor of moonlight as shown in the fine figure at 1093.

1072. So Tennyson, Ulysses: 'The slow moon climbs.'

1073. Cf. 1045 ff., and Moral Ode 74 f.: 'His eyen beoþ so brihte, sunne and mone, heuene, and fur beoþ þeostre ayeyn his lyhte.' See table of Biblical references.

to-euen. Virtually a compound, though the simple verb even is sufficient, as in Alex. 1870, 4483, the prep. being in one case with, in the other to. It is not improbable, however, that & is copied by mistake from 1071, in which case to euen is the inf. of purpose with clym.

1076. Cf. the same thought with slightly different application in Milton's Nativity Hymn 79 ff.

1077. tres ful schym. Cf. 76 ff. and n.

1082. Cf. 225 and n.

fleschly. Cf. bodyly, 1090; mancȝ, 1154. All these words are significant by the fact that he was at this time out of the body; see 61. Cf. 223 n.

1085. dased quayle. See 345 and n. Cf. Chaucer, 'couche as doth a quayle,' Clerk's Tale, Envoi 30. This simile seems to show rather nice observation. In Sandys and van Dyke's Upland Game Birds, pp. 28, 29, Edwyn Sandys describes a 'dased quayle' upon which a 'rare good dog' actually stepped before it flushed; 'it was badly scared and had its plumage compressed about it as tightly as possible.'

1088. glymme. N. E. D. (s. v. glim) suggests 'delight' as the meaning of glymme; 'brightness' is certainly more characteristic.

1090. Cf. 225 and n.

1093. maynful mone. So ‘the mone in the merke myghtely shone,’ Destr. Troy 3195; ‘þe mone wiþ hire muchele maht,’ Böddeker 156. 19.

1093 f. The moment is that of twilight, when one who perhaps has been watching the sunset turns, and is suddenly surprised with the moon hanging in full and marvelous splendor just above the horizon. Similarly the radiant host of the redeemed bursts suddenly upon the unprepared gaze of the poet. This fine simile, condensed as it is, may be classed with the one at 1115 (cf. n.). Both, as showing the poet’s observation of nocturnal beauty, may be compared with Pur. 1758 ff., in still a different mood, where the feast lasted tyl fayled þe sunne;

þenne blykned þe ble of þe bryȝt skwes, Mourkenes þe mery weder, & þe myst dryues þorȝ þe lyst of þe lyfte, bi þe loȝ medoes.

1094. day-glem. So day-rawe, Pur. 893; heuen-glem, ib. 946.

dryue al doun. So ‘the day yeid doun,’ Gol. and Gaw. 228; and at dawn ‘the day vp droghe,’ Destr. Troy 755; cf. 11078; Alex. 561, 686; Sege of Jer. 850.

1108. liureȝ. The word suggests again the feudal conception of Christ which underlies the poet’s version of the parable of the vineyard and the description of heaven. It had higher associations than with us. In like manner: ‘Meknes is a clothynge of all colors. . . . Mercy is likende to whyte. . . . Drede has colors of rede. . . . þes þre are calde þe lefra (liveries) of oure lorde, þat he cleths his childer ine or þai may comme to hym’ (Rich. Rolle, ed. Horstmann, I. 172, frag.). Cf. Milton’s ‘thousand liveried angels,’ Comus 455.

1110. Like Bonaventura’s description (Diæta Salutis, tit. 10, Cap. 6): ‘Christus est et erit ille chorealis duxor, ducens ac praecedens illam sociatatem beatissimam. Et ideo dicitur, quod agnus qui in medio throni est, reget eos, & alii sequentur agnum quocumque ierit.’ Cf. also Mone, Hymn. Med. Ævii 3. 160:

Te agnum sine macula jam sequitur stola candidâ, filium virginis,
quocumque virginum flos ieris.

1111. red golde. Apparently added for embellishment by the poet.

1113. trone a tras. M. (p. 205) cites Morte Arth. 4055 : 'The trays of the traytore he trynys fulle evenne'; cf. Pat. 101.

throne. Cf. 944 n.

1114. plyt. See 647 n. and 309 n. 'There was no crowding in their condition.' Perhaps the part. adj. implyt, 'entangled,' is intended.

1115. The simile is not uncommon; cf. 'meke as a mayden,' Destr. Troy 130, 3745, 3892; Horstmann, 1881, 467. 57. Kölbing, Eng. Stud. 16. 273, says: 'Der Dichter denkt jedenfalls an das Messopfer, wo leicht ein Streit um die durch den Rang bestimmte Reihenfolge entstehen kann (vgl. Chaucer, C. T., Prol. 449 ff. und Zupitza z. d. St., Anglia 1. 479 f.), an dem sich freilich sittsame [seme] Mädchen nicht betheiligen werden; so denkt auch hier keines an Rangunterschiede.'

1121. legyounes of aungele3. Apoc. 5. 11 says, 'angelorum multorum'; legyounes is due, no doubt to 'legiones angelorum' of Matt. 26. 53.

1122. kesten ensens. Evidently a current expression. Cf. Alex. 163, where to the god Serapis they 'ensence castis.'

1126. Vertues. One of the nine orders of angels. See Rom. 8. 38; Eph. 1. 21; Col. 1. 16. They were first described in a treatise attributed to Dionysius, De Cœlesti Hierarchia (see ch. 8). Cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa I, Quæst. 108. G. cites a M. E. enumeration in Horstmann, 1881, Ipotis 90 ff. The poet may have taken the phrase Vertues of heuen from the preface in the mass for the Assumption (cf. p. xvi) and other feasts of the Virgin: 'Per quem Majestatem tuam laudant Angeli, adorant Dominationes, tremunt Potestates, Cœli, cœlorumque Virtutes, ac beata Seraphim, socia exultatione concelebrant.'

1129f. The poet seems to mean, 'Glad desire entered my heart to describe the Lamb with many a marvel.'

1135. wyse is always transitive in O. E. and M. E. Cf. Pur. 453, 1564; Pat. 60; Gaw. 549, 739. Perhaps it has the connotation of a middle voice here, and means 'appear'; or should we read con he wyse?

1141. A difficult line. '(Yet) it would please none to doubt the Lamb's joy.' As it stands, Lombe and delyt seem to constitute a double object of wene. Perhaps Lombez is the correct reading.

1146. wyth lyf wern laste & lade. As in 578. Cf. Matt. 19. 29; John 10. 10.

1152. luf-longyng. Cf. 'Ich libbe in loue-longyng,' Bödeder 147. 5; 'A swete loue-longyng Myn herte bouri out stong,' 196. 3, 4.

1154. malte. See 224 n. Cf. this line with 225 and n.

1159 f. Two interpretations are possible: (1) 'If no one could prevent my plunging into the stream, I expected (I poset, 1157) to swim the remaining distance, though I should die for it at the end (per)'; (2) (supposing that and belongs at the beginning of 1160, instead of 1159) 'None could prevent my plunging in, and even swimming across, though I should die at the end.' G. follows (1).

1161. munt. In Gaw. 2274, 2290, 2345, 2350, 2352, this and kindred words connote violence or precipitation, but not at Pur. 1628.

1167. raas. The correct form would be res, as at Pur. 1782; Gaw. 1164, 1899; from O. E. ræs.

1175. sykying. The only instance in the poem of the pres. part. in -yng. See p. xii, n. 6. The combination of this word with sayd is a formula in alliterative poems. Thus, 'sykande he sayde,' Pur. 715; 'sykynghe he sayde,' Gaw. 753; so Destr. Troy 866; Morte Arth. 3795. But such a phrase as with syking, or the gerund in various other adverbial phrases is even commoner; cf. 'seid withe siking sare,' Awntyrs of Arth. 88; Destr. Troy 495, 2168, 2680, 3288, 8032, 8452, etc.; Alex. 5052. Three explanations of the exceptional form are possible: (1) the usual one, that this is a variation due to a Southern scribe; (2) that & sykying is an error for with sykying (but cf. Gaw. 753 with 1796); or (3) that through a word of this kind, which was almost stereotyped in its use, now as verbal noun, and now as a pres. part., to express one and the same idea, the -ing form was more easily confused with the pres. part., and was here supplanting the -ande form more rapidly than in the case of other words.

1186. garlande. Suggested by the 'flurted flowre<sup>z</sup>,' 208? But Bonaventura says (Diæta Salutis, Tit. 10, Cap. 2): 'In illo cælesti regno est sertum speciosum vel corona, quia dicitur in Psalmo [20] de quolibet sancto : “ Posuisti in capite ejus coronam de lapide pretioso.” Iste lapis est margarita illa, quam qui invenit, vendit omnia, etc. [Matt. 13].

1189. hade I. A protasis (see 421 n.) to apodosis in 1194.

1193. present. Cf. 389 n.

1195. Cf. 131 and n.

of happe. Construe with more.

1199. hit arn mad. See 290 n.; 895 n.

1204. Frende. Cf. a Hymn to Christ, E. E. T. S. 26. 86. 78, 79 :

Wele aghte myn herte þan to be his,
ffor he es þat frende þat neuer will faile.

1205. See 19, 41 n., 1172.

1209. Cf. Bone Florence 1004 :

Be hym y sawe in forme of bredd
When the preest can synge.

Also 1101, a Lord ‘that preestys schewe in forme of bredd.’ Immediately after the consecration of each element in the mass occurs this rubric : ‘Genuflexus [sacerdos] adorat, surgit, ostendit populo,’ etc. See p. li.

1211. gef (pret.) is a probable error for gyue (pres. subj.), this and the last line constituting the customary prayer at the close of a poem.

1212. Cf. 1 and p. xlvi.
